Democratic County Convention.

A Democratic County Convention for the purpose of nominating a full County ticket, to be voted for at the coming June election, and selecting seven delegates to the State Convention, is hereby called to meet at Eugene City, Friday April 11, 1884, at 10 o'clock, a m. The following is the representation allow each precinct, based upon one delegate from each precinct and one delegate for each 25 votes or majority fraction thereof cast for State Senator at the last June election:

North Eugene..... 4 Willamette South Eugene..... 9 Mohawk 2 Middle Fork...... 3 McKenzie.....

The committee would recommend that primary meetings be held Saturday, April 5, 1884. Two new precincts having been created, from the best information of the committee, it has taken one delegate from the old precincts and given the same to the new precincts in addition to their delegate at large.

R. B. COCHRAN, Chairman.

The Dream.

EGGENE, March 25, 1884. "Good morning," said Wesley the Witty, "the sky indicates a fine day, and as I have s few idle moments I would like to walk with you while I relate apart of that strange prophetic dream.

"It would be a source of great pleasure to me," said I, to hear that very remarkable dream, besides it would unlock a storehouse of very valuable information for the public generally, I am delighted to have the pleasure of your company."

"And I am more than delighted," said Wesley the Witty, "to have the opportunity of communicating to you such important facts."

"Thank you," said I, and as we moved along slowly, Wesley the Witty commenced to re-

I ste the wonderful prophetic dream. "For several days," said Wesley the Witty, "I felt very strange, light and airy, like I was inspired. One evening as I walked home in company with my new friend from Baker, I told him I felt like some great secret was about to be communicated to me in a mysterions way. He smiled and said it could not be trusted to a more discreet person. When I got home and scated myself in the easy chair I told the madame I was inspired by some strange feeling. She said I had been thinking too much, which caused a flow of blood to my head. She said I must bathe my feet in warm water, and then apply a light mustard draft to them. I said bathing would be sufficient, which was done, and then I retired. The madame said I had not been in the ned exceed ing five minutes until I was in a profound aleep more like a dead person. I remained in a kind of trance for over an hour before I could be awakened. I had not closed my eyes when a strange sight appeared before my mind, At a distance I saw a procession mov ly towards the Royal Star Chamber. It annoved me for immediately appeared in the distance a funeral cortege of some of my old friends. Leading the procession, I at once recognized the familliar face of Edward the Slippery, then came the fragile form of Jim the Gimleter clothed in surplice and gown, which astonished me to see him acting in the capacity of priest. But then it occurred to me that Jim the Gimleter was gifted by nature and practice for many vocations. Immediately after Jim the Gimleter came the remains enclosed in a plain but rich casket, borne by four pall bearers, John of Eugene, Joseph the Meek, Joel the Pure, and Walter the Easy. Next came the chief mourners, Rodney the Silent, and Abe the Sly. After them followed the near friends and political companions, Clay the Gental, Robert the Just, Jessee the Handsome, George the Bland, and Joseph the Meek, Joel the Pure, and Walter the Easy. Next came the chief mourners, Rodney the Sileut, and Abe the Sly. After them followed the near friends and political companions, Clay the Genial, Robert the Just, Jessee the Handsome, George the Bland, and last, though not least, came the ponderous form of Abram the Cunning, swinging both arms in gesticulations, at the same time speaking in an undertone, though distinct. He was seriously discussing, in his own mind, what effect his presence in that crewd would have on his business. I have only three friends here, said Abram the Cunning, 'Rodney the Silent, Clay the Genial and Abe the Sly. Rodney the Silent, Clay the Genial and Abe the Sly. Rodney the Silent can help me in my business wonderfully if I can only get him elected to the Senate. He didn't exactly suit me the way he acted in that Regent business, but he must go the Senate. I guess Abe the Sly is all right, for five hundred was little enough, yes, too small for that work. The grafts are all living, and the continuous distinct the continuous poung trees budding. Average, five bushels to the tree-fifty thousand bushels; will load two big trains. By this time the procession had reached the city of the dead, and the casket was placed on the side of the grave ready to lower into the vault. Jim the Gimbeter, officiating High Priest of the Reyal Star Chamber, demanded attention, and in his dear, shrill voice said: "Brothers and companions, we have met to pay the last sad tribute to that once great political leader, John of Springheld. Remarks will now be in order."

"But," said Wesley the Witty, "I must rest before I commence that wonderful seene, and if you would be kind enough to walk with me next week I will relate it just as it occurred."

"Certainly," said I, so, next week we may averet the seven of the strange political leader, John of Springheld. Remarks will not be represented by the Court that service of this sum. And the casked was placed on the side of the grave ready to lower into the court of t carred."

"Certainly," said I, so, next week we may expect the scene of the strange political resur-
