The Remark That Was Lost.

[Paris Figaro.] The proverb that silence is golden may occasionally be carried out in too Paris aims at converting her house into wits and literati of the day. But it is a often insist upon talking all at once, and, to obviate this unpleasant result, the rule of the mansion is that while one personage discourses no interruption whatever can be permitted. It is said that M. Renan once attended one of these dinners, and, being in excellent vein, talked without a break during the whole repast. Toward the end of the dinner a guest was heard to commence a sentence, but he was instantly silenced by the hostess. After they had left the table, however, she at once informed the extinguished individual that, as M. Renan had now finished his conversation, she would gladly hear what he had to say. The guest modestly declined, the hostess insisted. "I am certain it was something of consequence," she said. "Alas! madame," he answered, "it was, indeed, but it is now too late. I should have liked a little more of that ice pudding!"

A Very Peculiar Case,

[Boston Herald.] Athol. A young man who had been all and so around the cylinder you will go his life afflicted with cyanosis, or "blue affection," was found dead in his bed in Cooleyville, and his heart was brought to the doctors for examination. During the prenatal life of a child there is a passage between the right and left sides of the heart called a foramen ovale. In healthy children this passage closes at birth, and, respiration beginning, the blood is forced round through to the lungs, and becomes purified and reddened. Sometimes the foramen ovals does not close and the child is blue, because the blood does not pass through the lungs as it ought. Such children usually die in a buried in Siberia, and in Boston against her that the eart wishes a divorce ought. A Story of Cartyle.

Edward King tells one of the most delightful anecdotes of Carlyle yet put forth. That portentous pseudo-philosopher, Mallock, called on the old Scotchman and let himself loose, talking Carlyle almost to death. Carlyle listened imperturbably, invited him to tea, and had him to smoke in the library afterward. When at last the youthful sage thought proper to take his leave, Carlyle accompanied him to the door and said: "Welt, good-bye, I've received ye kin lly, because I knew your mother, but I never want to set eyes on

THE NEWSPAPER MAN.

A Lecture to Young Men Who Wish to Become Journalists.

[Luke Sharp in Detroit Free Press.] And here comes my lecture to the average young man who wants to be a journalist. I think he invariably applies to the wrong person in a newspaper office. There is one man on every journal who just yearns for something new, something odd, something spicy or something interesting. That man is the city editor. No pen can tell the insatiable appetite a city editor has for news in almost any shape. To show you how he loves an odd thing at all havards. I will relate the following bit of my own experience with him. At one time, when smallpox threatened to become epidemic in this city, it was ramored that the pesthouse was not conducted as it ought to thing. But as I sot there an' watched have been. One evening, as the city -regular "Slaves of the Lamp"-I their own handwriting." "First-rate. Let's have your copy We'll put a six-line head on it." The reporters looked sort of

they hadn't done this themselves. There is nothing can equal the appetite of the average city editor for something that will "take." Now if 1 were suddenly thrown on the mercies of a cold world in any American city, and wanted to get on a paper, I wouldn't apply to anybody for a situation. I would knock around town and try to pick up someliteral a sense. A certain great lady in | thing that would interest readers. I would endeavor to write it up in an ina sort of Hotel Rambouillet, and with that object gives periodical dinners, at manuscript up to the office and leave which assemble most of the best known | it on the city editor's table without a just as anxious to print it next morning as I would be to have it appear. If it were used, I would apply for the customary 2 cents a line, and would live around at the cheap restaurant. weakness of great talkers that they just as anxious to print it next morning around at the cheap restaurants and try it again. If it were not used I could conclude that I wasn't the style of writer that that particular paper wanted, and I would select another ionrnal as the next victim. If none of them wanted the stuff I wrote, I would by and by get it knocked into me that chopping cordwood or some such occupation was my forte and not news-paper work. If the work was always up to the mark there would be little

If nature has intended a man for a journalist he will drift into latter has referred her claims to the journalism in spite of all obstacles. He may have been educated as a lawyer, a clergyman, a doctor or a backwoodsman, but he will be certain to nibble at journalism till he gets caught. So, young man, if the newspaper instinct is in you there are a thousand till it takes from you all that is worth having, when it will fling you remorselessly into the literary rubbish heap, which might fitly be labeled as printers label used-up type-"Dead matter."

The New York Crank.

[Cor. Cineinnati Enquirer.]

New York is the greatest city in the world for cranks. They thrive here. In Paris they are anubbed, except when they write for the papers, when they write for the papers, when they are glorified; in London they are suspected by the police; in Ireland they are shot; in St. Petersburg they are sho they become Concord philosophers early in life, and devote themselves to study until they become too cultured for earth, when they die—or come to New York.
