When A. T. Stewart Was Nominated.

[Ben. Perley Poor.]

A. T. Stewart, the New York merchant prince, made large sales to the government during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and he displayed his gratitude by making Mrs. Lincoln handsome presents. He was also a large contributor to the fund of $100,000 raised by the merchants of New York for Gen. Grant, as an acknowledgment of his war services; and when the general was elected president, Mr. Stewart was selected by him as the man to reorganize the treasury department, prune off its excesses, and reform its abuses. Mr. Stewart was delighted with the order, and had a suite of rooms in the L'abbitt house, with a private entrance fitted for his occupation until he could go housekeeping. A few days before the 4th of March he came to Washington and occupied these three rooms, with Judge Hilton as his companion and adviser. After the inauguration, he was nominated by Gen. Grant; but Senator Sumner, who had been consulted as to the formation of the cabinet, interposed his objection to the immediate consideration of Mr. Stewart's nomination.

Late in the afternoon of that day, a rumor got abroad that there was a law, understood to have been really written by Alexander Hamilton while secretary of the treasury, prohibiting an importer in active business from holding the position of secretary of the treasury. A newspaper correspondent obtained the law bearing on the case, and carried it to Gen. Butterfield, who conveyed it to Mr. Stewart and his legal adviser, Judge Hilton. They consulted Chief Justice Chase, and he confirmed the view which had been taken of the law by those who first brought it to Mr. Stewart's attention. Mr. Stewart then proposed to retire from business and devote the entire profits that might accrue during the time that he should hold the office of secretary of the treasury to charitable objects. But this was decided to be something which would not be proper, either for him to carry out, or for the government to accept. Immediately after seeing Chief Justice Chase, Mr. Stewart and Judge Hilton drove to the White House, and laid the facts and opinions before the president, who, on the next day, wrote a message to the senate, asking that the law of 1788 be set aside so as to enable the candidate to hold the office. This the senate declined to do. It was a very natural ambition for a man of Mr. Stewart's tastes and training to desire to be at the head of the treasury, and it is not unlikely that the disappointment was a very severe one. This was the beginning of the "unpleasantness" between President Grant and Senator Sumner, which finally resulted in an open rupture.

Pet Cats' Pictures.

[New York Sun.]

"It was expected, said a west side photographer, that instantaneous photography would result in some interesting scientific revelations. And so it has, but by far the most conspicuous result of the instantaneous process is the vast number of photographs of cats in the possession of the great American people. "You see," the photographer went on, "about nine-tenths of the household pets in the cities are cats. Allowing then, that the increase in the numbers of other pets photographed has been proportionately great, the grand total seems still to consist principally of pictures of cats. There is this also to be remembered, that the instantaneous process is the only one you can depend upon for a good picture of Thomas or Abby, and the discovery of that process has made easy work of what was very uncertain and uphill business. "It is a fact in natural history," continued the man of the camera, with a learned air, "that the cat is almost the only creature which does not remain motionless for a moment when it hears an unusual sound. Now, suppose you succeed in making a cat lie still in a chair or on a stand till you have stepped out of the camera's field. Then the man at the camera tinkles a bell or does something to attract the cat's attention so that she will look like a live cat. What does she do? Well, her spine begins to arch, the hairs on it tip forward, her tail becomes as big as your arm. It is a good time then to abandon the work. She thinks you're putting up a job on her, and makes a break for the skylight. "But the quick-as-a-wink method," said the man of dry and wet plates, "has done away with all this. It is quick enough to photograph greased lightning; and with it the historic cats of Silkeny could have been pictured just as they would have looked, if the eye were as quick as the camera, when their memorable conflict was at its hottest. A handsome cat makes a very pretty photograph, and the popularity of pictures of pet cats has grown so much that there is almost a craze in fashionable life for having the Toms and Tabbies of the household reproduced on imperial cards and displayed in velvet frames on brackets and chimney pieces."

The Small Minorities.

[Religion: Philosophical Journal.]

The opinions, the faiths, the governments of the world are controlled everywhere and always by small minorities, often by one man, who sways a million of votes as he pleases, while each one of the million fondly believes that he is doing his own thinking, deciding for himself, voting entirely to suit himself.

As hamed to Strike a Dude.
[burdette.]

Nobody ever saw a dead dude. Death goes around, knocking out old men, decrepit old blind women, helpless infants and feeble cripples, but we reckon when it comes to the pinch, he's kind of ashamed to strike a dude. There are humiliating depths of degradation from which even death shrinks.

Gardening is practically taught in more than 20,000 primary schools in France.

Be omnipotent in self-hood! What'er you are, that grandly be. For to make of life a fustion is an irksome travesty. Nature knows no affectation; bluster ill becomes the brave; Life unweal shall evanish in th' alembic of the grave.

IMITATION OYSTERS.

A Traveler's Tale of Oyster Factories in Paris.

[New York Sun.]

"The most singular thing that I saw in Paris," said a gentleman just returned from Europe, "was artificial oysters; not what you call mock oysters, that is, meat done up in a patty or a povie, but an imitation of the real bivalve and fit to serve raw. And as far as their looks go, you would say at once that they were genuine American oysters, but when you came to eat one the difference would be perceptible at once. How they are made and what is used in their manufacture is a mystery I did not solve, but it is certain that a great deal of money is made by the producers. The usual price is 5 cents each, and sometimes in the second-class eating houses they are to be had for 3 cents, though they are not apt to be fresh at that price. You order a plate on the half shell, and when the waiter brings them to you they look just as nice as those you get in the best New York places. If you are not a good judge of oysters you will eat them with your wine and go away without asking any questions. "The only thing genuine about them is the shells. The manufacturers buy second-hand shells from restaurant keepers at a small expense, and with a sort of paste, fasten the spurious oyster in its place. Only one-half a shell is used for the purpose, and in that shape the fraud oysters are packed on shelves in boxes. Others, to be served without the shell are put up in cans containing twenty-five or 100. The dealers in real oysters urge the saloon-keepers to break up their shells as fast as their contents are consumed, and even pay the cooks and waiters to pound them to pieces. "Do we have any manufactured oysters in this country?" a reporter inquired of a Fulton market oysterman. "Yes, sir," he replied; "the standard Oil company and several other similar concerns are manufacturing oysters into lamp wicks, warranted to burn oil or lamps, and I think it's infernal!" "Hold on," exclaimed the reporter, "that is not what I mean. What I want to know is, do they make an imitation oyster that could be sold as the real article?" "Not that I know of. I do not think they have come to that yet. What is more, I do not think it would pay, that is, just at present; but we cannot tell what we will come to if any more oil is dumped in the bay and river. At present the finest oysters are 2 or 3 cents apiece, and I should say they could not be imitated and sold for that price."

He Kissed the Governor's Wife.

[Carr] in Cleveland Leader.]

A most villainous picture is being published in all the country papers purporting to be a likeness of Senator Vance, of North Carolina. It is a libel on one of the finest looking men in public life. Senator Vance is a tall, broad-shouldered, handsome man of 34 years. He has a large, pleasant, open face, a bright, fun-loving eye, and luxuriant hair and mustache of iron-gray. He is a very popular man among his fellow senators, and he can tell more good stories than any of them. He likes a joke, and North Carolina is full of the evidences of his propensities in this direction. One day when he was governor of the state it is said that he was riding on horseback along a road about ten miles from the capital, when a stranger overtook him. The two men fell into conversation, and the stranger told Vance he had been to Raleigh to see the governor, and that he had called at his home, but that he was not at home. "Did you see the governor's wife?" said Vance. "Yes," was the reply. "And did you not kiss her?" The man, very much astonished, replied, "No, but she was very pretty, and I should have liked nothing better." "Well, I've kissed her," continued Vance, "and I never meet her but that I do so." And, thereupon, after enjoying the man's astonishment for a moment, he told him that he was the governor.

The Lime-Kiln Club's Museum.

[Detroit Free Press.]

The keeper of the museum reported the receipt of the following relics within the last month: A stocking said to have been worn by Cleopatra on the day of her death. It is just a fit for Givendad Jones, and he wears a No. 11 hock. A coonskin cap supposed to have belonged to Daniel Boone. One who sees the cap cannot blame the Indians for wanting to kill Daniel. A pistol said to have been worn by Lord Cornwallis when he surrendered. A general who would lug such a weapon around could only expect to come to some bad end.
