Street-Cars as Missionaires. [Foreign Letter.]

"When the question of introducing street-cars in India first came up, nearly twenty years ago," said John Stephenson, the famous car-builder, "one of the great-est obstacles to be considered was caste. It was easy to devise a method of separating, within reasonable limits, the various classes, for the cars could be made with two interior compartments, and with seats on top for passengers of inferior classes. But how to collect the fares was the question that puzzled everybody. A Brahmin conductor could not receive coins from the hands of his inferiors, nor could a Brahmin passenger receive change from a conductor of lower caste. There were many other regulations growing out of caste distinctions which threatened to make street-cars a failure in the cities of India But the cars were sent out and matters were left largely to adjust themselves. The result is that instead of caste making the street-cars a failure, the streetcars have made caste to a considerable extent a failure. They are now u ilized in the principal cities of India very much as they are in New York. Besides doing away with caste ob-stacles to their success, the street-cars-have removed many of the restrictions which caste put upon the transaction of business generally in that country. I am told that they have produced a very noticeable change in this respect—that they may be regarded, indeed, as among the chief instruments with which the changed order of things was brought about. Street-cars are a necessity, and whatever stands in the way of their use will be done away with by the people." When the British government made it impossible to enforce forfeitures and other penalties by reason of the loss or renunciation of caste, a considerable step toward the abolition of caste distinctions was taken. No laws for the government of persons have been more rigid or more speedy in respect to their penalties than were the regulations of caste. In certain provinces of India, when under native rule, it was regarded as justifiable homicide for a man of high caste to strike dead a person of inferior caste who should touch him even by accident. One of the steps to-ward the present state of things were permitting a Brahmin to engage in pursuits which had been followed only by persons of inferior grade, while still prohibiting persons of low caste from taking upon themselves functions which belonged to those above them in rank. In the present stage of the decay of caste but he could not sit at the table with them after quitting the court-room.

California's Worship of Money.

[Helen Bartlett in Pioneer Press.] "Californians have such big hearts," re marked one who had lived there a score of years, and ought to know. Yet the coun-try is far from perfect, even though it is in many respects a marvel. In the first place, the worship of money, particularly in San Francisco, has reached a formidable pass. If a gentleman descants on the desirability of any young lady he has met in society, he rarely describes her as bright or inter esting or intelligent or pretty, but simply as the possessor of so many hundreds of Every marriageable young thousands. woman is distinctly labeled as to her market value. Without a large fortune you are a bigger nobody than you are in New York; and with it you can envy the destinics of the entire state.

It is no great exaggeration to assert that the whole of California is owned by half a dozen Irishmen; and, of course, such a condition of affairs conduces neither to the public nor the private weal. Money is always a power, but in California it becomes a god, and character suffers a consequent demoralization. Still, no one should judge

A MICHIGAN LOGGING CAMP.

Ninety Tons of Lumber Pulled Over an Ice Road by Two Horses.

[Cleveland Leader.] The several logging camps of one lumber firm in this city are all in northern Michigan, and have turned out in the season just closed an aggregate of 40,000,000 feet of lumber. The camps are scattered along the Au Sable and Peru. Pine rivers. Some of the logs are floated 150 miles before the mill at Oscoda is reached. The logs are hauled from where they are cut to the river on low bob sleds over a carefully prepared roadway. These roads, after a snow foundation is formed at the beginning of the season, are carefully scraped with a patent scraper. Then a sprinkl ng-cart, with an abundant flow of water, is run over the road at night. The water freezes and makes the roadbed a mass of solid ice. Each snowfall is carefully scraped off and the flooding process con inues until the ice driveway is eighteen or twenty inches above the surface of the adjacent land. Thus built, the roadbeds are firm and not as susceptible to a thaw as the ordinary snow-packed roads. In laying out these roads a distance of two miles is often traversed to make a point not more than one quarter of a mile distant. This is requis te in making it perfectly level or with a slight incline toward the objective point of the loaded sleds.

On such magnificent roals immense hauls can be made, and the exponse incurred in building and caring for them is amptly justified. In the company's office in this city is a large photograph of the largest load of logs ever drawa by a single team of horses. The picture was taken about three weeks ago at Otsega lake, on the head waters of the Au Sable river. There are twenty-one pine logs, sixty-four feet long, and the load mea-ured 30,038 feet of good lumber, board measure, The hollow butts, bark, and waste are all scaled out of these figures. A close estimate of the weight of the load puts it at ninety tons.

The team weighed about 3,200 pounds, and easily hauled this immenso weight a distance of a mile and a quarter. The horses pull wide apart, the sit in judgment upon the acts of Brahmins of the same length length neck yoke and whitletrees being twelve of the same length, and the logs rise up to a height of about sixteen feet. The runners of the bob sleds are about four inches wide and six inches thick. The bobs set very low and spread fully twelve feet. They are connected by cross chains which run from the heel of the front sled to the toe of the rear one, crossing in the centre. The logs are loaded by means of skids which reach f om the ground to the load. With a ro; e and tackle the horses roll the logs up the inclined plane into place with the greatest case. There is a deal of rivalry in the lumber campa over the question of big loads. A few years ago three or four of these logs, scaling 1,500 or 2,000 feet of lumber, were considered a pretty good load for a team. The improved roadways have largely contributed to the increased hauls.
