A Burglar's Experience.

[Folk's Sun.]

A gentleman was conversing with a burglar, who is serving time in one of the penitentiaries, not long ago, and during the conversation he asked the burglar if he was ever frightened when in a house on a burgling expedition. The burglar said he was frightened once so he was weak as a cat. Said he: "About seven or eight years ago I got into a house in a town on the Mississippi river, belonging to a man that I thought was up in the woods. I got in the cellar and went up stairs to the dining-room, and lit the gas, and opened a bed-room door, and was going in, when I saw the man and his wife sitting up in bed, with a sewing machine cover between them, playing cards. The man was dealing, and the wife was keeping count, and they were playing casino. They did not see me, but at first I thought they did, and that both had revolvers to shoot me. I backed out, and thought I would go through the rest of the house, but the fright I got took all the tuck out of me, and after thinking it over a minute, I went down cellar and crawled out.

"The next day I was in the postoffice and heard a couple of men talking about playing cards, and one said, 'By gosh, my wife and me sat up in bed till 2 o'clock this morning playing cards,' and then he looked at me and laughed, and I thought he knew me, and I went out of the postoffice and took the first train for Winona. And, do you know, that man haunts me. The other day the sheriff brought a prisoner here from a western county, and, blast my eyes, if the sheriff wasn't the same man I saw sitting up in bed playing casino eight years ago. I tell you, fellows in our business have queer experiences."

Charity's Labor Test.

[Inter Ocean.]

There is a labor-test institution in New York, established for the purpose of experimenting with applicants for charity. Most of the charitable institutions of the city are furnished with check-books on this place, and when any man applies for aid on the ground that he can get no work to do he is given a check on the superintendent of the labor-test. These presenting himself he is set to sawing and splitting wood or handling coal at a hire of 10 cents an hour. The work being so hard and the pay so very small it is not difficult to determine deserving cases from mere impostors, and when men are found worthy of assistance the institutions use all practicable means for providing them with more profitable work. The workers are allowed to put in five hours a day, which affords them at least subsistence, and allows them time in which to look for other work. The plan is said to work very satisfactorily.

Gen. Jackson and His Horse.

[Staunton (Va.) Spectator.]

An aged colored man, in the solitude of East Tennessee, tells an original anecdote about Gen. Jackson. According to this authority, the general, having ridden up to a little tavern in Marysville and found a score or more of loungers who were not inclined to make a place for him in front of the fire, called to a servant: "Boy, have you got any oysters in the shell?" "Yes, massa, plenty of 'em." "Well, put my horse in the stable, and measure out a half-bushel of oysters and carry to him." The loungers speedily thinned out to see the horse eat oysters. The general, after enjoying the fire, and seeing the boy, said: "Well, boy, how is my horse getting on with his oysters?" "Oh, massa, he ain't eating 'em." "Very well, bring 'em to me and give him some oats."

The Quarrel Over Talmage's Pulpit.

[New York Herald.]

"Did you ever hear the story about the pulpit end of Talmage's tabernacle?" said a business man who lives in Brooklyn to a Herald reporter. "No." "Why, the land on which the pulpit stands doesn't belong to the tabernacle at all. When the new building was put up about ten years ago the owner of the land let the people go ahead and said nothing until the church was completed. Then he jumped on them—and he has kept jumping on them ever since. He didn't know that they had backed over on his land, but he knew it all the time, and they have had it pretty factually brought to their attention. They wanted to buy the land and he wouldn't sell; finally they fixed on a rental of $800 a year. Every time he sends around the bid he puts on $50 or $100. They refuse to pay and say they can't stand such an exorbitant raise. Then he begins preparations to pull down the pulpit end of the meeting-house; they find out what he is about, then they come down with the additional rental, and all goes on serenely till the next pay day."

The Phelps Family.

[Eastern Exchange.]

No one can ever accuse the Phelps family, of Simsbury, Conn., of failing to respond to the call of service to the state, even in the early days of the colonies. Jeffery O. Phelps, Jr., is now serving his first term in the legislature. His father, Jeffery O. Phelps, served one term in the house and one in the senate. His grandfather, Jeffery O. Phelps, Sr., served five terms in the house. His great-grandfather, Noah A. Phelps, served five terms also. His great-great-grandfather, Noah Phelps, served nineteen terms. His great-great-grandfather, David Phelps, served seven terms, and his great-great-great-grandfather served eighteen terms. Young Phelps, the present representative, is not yet 26 years old.

Valuable Mosaic.

[Chicago Herald.]

At Nimes, in France, there has been found a block of mosaic masonry twelve meters in extent, representing a Roman emperor enthroned with a woman at his side and surrounded by a group of slaves and a warrior wearing a helmet. Two men before him are leading a lion and a wild boar. The colors are as fresh as if applied yesterday, and the pavement is in a state of perfect preservation. Few specimens so good as it is exist in museums. The market value is estimated to be at least $200,000.
