An English bicyclist describes in the London Standard his journey slone through Germany. "From its start at Berlin," he says, "to its finish at Co-logne, the trip covered several hundred miles, and extended over three kingdoms-Prussia, Saxony and Bavaria and half a dozen smaller principalities: every day, and indeed, almost every mile of the road, having its peculiar in-terest and charm, which any mere guide-book summary would spoil. The most picturesque and interesting sec tion of t is journey was perhaps the run through the Thuringian Forest, from Gotha to Schmalkalden, and it was also the shortest, or should have been if I had taken the direct road; but I was misdirected at Fredrichsroda, and sent wandering across the hills by a side road that added some ten or fifteen miles to the day's run, and filled it with novel experiences, some the reverse of pleas-ant. Leaving Gotha in the early morn-ing, I reached the borders of the forest in about half an hour, and, after a magnificent run of some ten or twelve miles in complete sylvan solitude, halted for breakfast at Reinhardsbrunn, a well-known mineral spring, where a good hotel has been built in one of the most charming spots in the whole forest. All round is the dense pine wood, while in front lie a series of little lakes, whose surface looks as black as ebony in the shadow of the dark green foliage, and whose glassy smoothness is only rippled by the lazy leaping of an occasional trout. Un-fortunately, 1 at one time got to the wrong side of a very stiff ridge of hills which I had to cross before reaching Schmalkalden, and the rain now began to come down heavily. All things con-sidered the situation was not cheerful, but in half an bour the sun had again broken out, and so I rode down through the little village of Tambach, and began the work of serious hill-climbing under somewhat better circumstances than 1 had ventured to expect. For close on eight miles it was a steady rise, and the road being rather wet and heavy I had to walk myself and push my machine up the greater part of the way. Once the top was reached, however, all my troubles were forgotten I passed from Saxe-Coburg into a patch of country that used to belong to Electoral Hesse, and now, of course, is in-corporated into Prussia, and found a good road, and a long steady descent. No one could long resist the exhilera-tion produced by silently shooting down such a hill, without the slightest exertion, at the rate of about twenty miles an hour, with jacket thrown open and helmet off to get the full advantage of the delightful breeze. This is another of the charms of cycling-the constant change and variety of sensations being enough to make the most confirmed hypochondriac 'feel jolly.'" The Mule's Superior Intelligence. During a chat with the foreman of the street car stables, James E. Barry, the subject turned to a discussion of the characteristics of horses and mules. He has been a close student of both, and the result of his experience is that the mule is entitled to the higher rank in sagacity Mr. Barry went on to say that the superiority of the mule is shown in his

the full length of the chain and surveys the field. If there be a stableman in sight he re-enters the stall and waits demurely until the coast is clear, when he comes out quickly and makes a dash for liberty and the street. Sometime: it requires all hands to catch him and bring him back. In the yard of one of the down-town stables there is a post to which four mules are generally tied after being curried. There was recently one mula there that was fond of slipping its chain-tag through the ring in the post, and then, to allow its mates to share in its liberty, he loosened the others. This he did so often he had to be closely watched. -N. O. Times-Democrat. Wanted Anstralia.
