THE TURKS.

The Kind of Literature that Satisfies the Average Ottoman. The Paternoster Row of Turkey is the Hodia-Pacha Road at Stambul, leading from the Sublime Porte to the Serasklerat. Both sides of this road are bordered with rows of bookstalls, in which may be had every publication recently issued from the rapidly-growing Turkish press. A complete catalogue, printed in Turkish, and also sold at the stalls, furnishes some interesting details concerning the state of Turkish literature at the present day and the taste of the general reader in Turkey. M. Clement Huart has recently written a paper on the works published at Constantinople from the year 1877 to 1883, which gives a good idea of Turkish literature in the present day. There are at present forty-five printing-offices at Stambul, and twenty-three at Galata and Pera, from waich are issued nine daily papers and twelve other periodicals. Twenty-one provinces possess official journals dealing with local affairs, and in nineteen provinces annual reports are printed in connection with the Administration. Of the four hundred works published since 1877, the translations. with the sole exception of a pamphlet on the navy translated from the English, are the works of French authors. Among these are Jules Verne's "Adventures of Three Russians and Three Englishmen," "Xavier de Ma'stre's "Mysteries of the Inquisition," "The Daughter of the Siberian Exile," and "The Prisoners of the Caucasus;" Eugene Sue's "Wandering Jew," Chataubriand's "The Last of the Abencerrages," Alphonse Karr's "Under the Limes," Dumas's "Monte Cristo," "The Wo men's Crusade," etc.; Balzac's "Bacheler," and several of Victor Hugo's writings. All kinds of original literary works are also to be half at the famous H. dja-Pacha Road. The headings of fictatious productions in prose, as well as in poetry, are well adapted to attract at nilon. Among these are "The Cafes Chantants of Paris," "The Sacriaces of the Executioner," "The Pohemian Girl," "Lovers' Stories and Adventure." "The Seven Beautles," "The Queen's Daughters, and others suitable to the taste of a Nation in which the harem is still an established institution. The dramas are, to judge from their headings, much of the same kind: but there are, besid s the e, a number of theological, scientific and legal works. Several barefully pre-notes and comments, are carefully prelegal works. Several Korans, with the exception of these, however, the scholastic works a e all embellished with titles such as the following: "The Splendid Pearl," on the principles of Mussulman laws; "The Cutting Sword," a treatise on religious controversies; "The Casket of Pearls," useful advice to the m latary profession, and "The Willow Branch, with the Most Beautiful Rhetorical Leaves." A pocket library, now in course of course of publication, contains volumes on women, the heavens, the earth, etc., and a "Universal History," in tive or six volumes will also shortly be completed. Most of the above works are sold at prices which bring them within the reach of everybody. Pall Mall Gazette.

THE "VIRGIN OF THE NAPKIN." A Pretty Story Connected With Murillo's

Painting.

When painting the pictures for the Capuchins, Murillo dwelt in their convent nearly three years, it is said, without once leaving it. He pointed for these monks twenty pictures with lifesize figures, and several smaller works. Seventeen of these are now in the Museum of Seville, for the monks had the wisdom to send their pictures to Cadiz for safe-keeping before the "Plunder master-general of Napoleon," as Soult has been called, could reach them. When the French wars were ended, the pictures were returned to Seville. I can not speak of them separately, but will say that the Madouna called "LaVirgen de la Servilleta," or the Virgin of the Nankin, now in the Museum, has this pretty story connected with it. The legend is that the cook of the convent grew very fond of Murillo during his long service to the artist, and when the time came for them to be separated, the cook begged the painter for a keepsake. The painter said he had no cauvas left; the cook qu'ekly gave him a napkia and asked him to use that; with his usual good nature, Murillo a sented, and soon painted this pic ure, which is now one of the famous art treasures of the world. It is not large, and represents the Virgin with the Child Jesus, who leans forward, almost out of the picture, as if to welcome any one who approaches it. It has a brilliant color, and so affects one that it is not easy to turn away from it. -Clara Erskine Ciement, in St. Nich-

In Parliament Forty Years Ago. Forty years since -in those pleasant times fashion and literature were intimately associated with public life. Even a certain dandyism was not without consideration in the House of Commons. Rude apparel and rude speeches were not regarded as characteristics of a practical politician; political questions were the familiar topics of the salons as well as of the lobbies; the social position of a Minister was not unimportant. And hospitality was generously extended to his supporter-, in many cases to opponent and friend alike. Lord John Russell, in his evidence before the Diplomatic Committee, said he had never contracted a debt until he came into office; and yet the salary of a Secretary of State is £5,000 a year. Classical studies were considered necessary for a gentleman's education, and had their due weight with the House. This blending of social and political circles was attended with more than mere party advantages. By mixing in society ali politicians, and especially Ministers, heard more of public opinion than when restricted to their own partial set of friends. The opinions and feelings of other classes found their representatives among the upper, and thus, if the ostrich hid his head, there were those ever ready to clear the sand of any of snakes, hity-englet him see the full extent of any of snakes, hity-englet thirty-five harmless.

DISAPPOINTED HUNTERS.

How a Girl and a Woman Kept Eight Sportsmen at Bay.

Eight residents of Bedford, Pa., went deer hunting last week on Buffalo Mountain. They tracked a large, fine deer, and one of them got a shot at it. The deer was wounded, but it seemed in a bigger hurry to get away than ever, and for an hour the nimrods followed it only by the trail of blood which it left. Finally a farm house loomed up before them, and the trail of blood led right into the enclosed back yard.

The party balted under a tree, and Cyrus Young was appointed a committee of one to go to the house, explain the circumstance, and ask for the game The rest of the crowd watched Cyrus and listened. Cyrus knocked boldly at the front door, and was met by a healthy looking, half-grown girl with a revolver in her hand.

"H-h-how far is to Bedford?" asked the embarrassed hunter, as the rest of the party dropped to the ground to be out of the sight of the armed maiden.

Just then the armed maiden's mother espeared behind her and struck out for Young's eye with a brawny fist that cemed to top off an arm a yard long Young would have retreated, but the girl pointed the revolver at him and he halted with sudden enthus asm. "I wonder if there are any mer

BUSTED IN LOVE.

Enfortunate Condition of a Marrying Young Man from Detroit.

If there is one thing sadder than an other in this world it is to see a young man with a buffalo-skin overcont on sit ting on the winter side of a grocery with tears in his eyes and nothing but a yarn mitten to wipe them away with, the famous bathing place has fallen in, Such a case was discovered by a pobeemen on Grand River Avenue yesterday, and when asked the cause of the young man's sorrow the ree'y was:

"Busted in love." "Who was she?"

"Worked in a corset factory." "Well, that's very little to ery over. Plenty of other girls around, you know.
