Artistic Mechanisms.

A recent notice of a mechanic in Massachusetts who is an expert in that department of natural history of which the butterfly is the chief representative suggests other and similar instances. It may be that the exactness required in mechanical work develops a taste for close study, or it may be that natural history and pure science become pleasant toils to the monotony of mechanical work; but it is the fact that some practical, day-working mechanics stand high in some scientific specialties.

There is a machinist—a fine tool maker—who is well known, and widely known, as an amateur astronomer. He has contributed importantly to the science; and is not surpassed in nicety and preciseness in designing astronomical mechanism.

Another is an expert steel engraver by choice and as a pastime, and yet, incredible as it may appear, he is a smith or forger, handling steel and iron in bars and the heavy hammer of the blacksmith all day, and doing delicate steel engravings at night or on "off hours." He has nearly finished designing and engraving a series of plates representing the childish legend of the "Death of Cock Robin," the proofs of which are really fine.

One left the machine shop three years ago, and set up as an engraver on jewelry, plate, and similar articles. He originates all his designs, and rarely makes a second drawing. He is a wonderful producer of elegant and legible monograms. A set of six silver buttons for a vest, all uniform in general design and no two alike in particulars, is very artistic, and yet he designed and engraved the six while the customer waited—perhaps an hour. These two instances show that the bent of the authors was naturally artistic rather than mechanical.

There is a young man 30 years old, who is better authority on the flora of New England than some of the authors of accepted text books. The fields, pastures, woods and by-ways are his haunts when he has an hour "in the season." He is not surpassed as a herbarist, and is quoted as an authority where he knows.

A surgeon was spoiled when another man, a machinist, went into the shop. He acts at call in setting bones and reducing sprains. He is so successful that he is in the confidence of the professionals, who are not ashamed to profit by his suggestions.—Scientific American.

Not Worthy.

Colonel Herimides Hodson, a prominent citizen of Arkansas, is dissatisfied with Cleveland's administration. "Let me tell you," said he to a party of friends the other evening, "that fellow Cleveland is a fraud."

"A fraud, eh," some one said in reply.

"Yes, sir—a consummate fraud. I called on the gentleman. He received me very graciously. I rather liked his appearance. A trifle flat, but pleasant. 'Mr. Cleveland,' said I, 'suppose we slip out and take something.' He looked at me strangely, but made no reply. 'Mr. Cleveland,' I repeated, 'suppose we dodge around and take a snort.' Still he did not reply. That ended it with me. A man who can act so discourteously toward a guest is not worthy of a prominent position."

There used to be an old gentleman in one of the parishes of Louisiana who was noted for his tremendous deportment and punctuality. Arriving in New Orleans for the first time he costed a young man about town who was standing on the corner of Canal street. "I wish, my young friend," said he, taking out his watch, "to go to the St. Charles Hotel." "Well," said the gilded youth, "you may go, but don't stay but half an hour."

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was organized in Marshall, Mich., nearly twenty-four years ago. It has now more than 16,000 members, and has laid out over $1,000,000 in insurance benefits, and given away over $500,000 to the needy, frequently not members of the Order.

A Political Fable.

There is not in all Russia a newspaper that dare print the facts in regard to the military situation. The nearest approach to anything like a critical view of it was published in Prince Meatchersky's Citizen in the form of a political fable entitled "The Bear and the Whale." This represented a bear sitting by the seashore admiring the view. Presently the whale of all the oceans swam up and asked him what he meant by approaching so near the whale's frontier. The bear answered back defiantly, and both engaged in a fierce war of epithets. "The whale shook with anger and roared, and the bear roared back again. They made such a noise that all the fishes of the ocean and all the beasts of the forest trembled with fear. The bear would liked to have skinned the whale, but he feared the water, and the whale was aware that he would be defenseless on shore." So after bellowing for half a day both dropped from fatigue.

Why She Dressed Like a Man.

My thin boots wore out in a few days. I forgot to hold up my dress and covered my petticoats with mud. My bonnets were spoiled one after another by the rain. I generally returned from the expeditions I took dirty, weary and cold, whereas my young men acquaintances, some of whom had been the companions of my childhood in Berri, had none of these inconveniences to submit to. I therefore had a long gray cloth coat made with trousers to match. When this costume was completed by a gray felt hat and a loose woolen cravat no one could have guessed that I was not a young student in my first year. My boots were my particular delight. I should like to have gone to bed with them. On their little iron heels I wandered from one end of Paris to the other. No one took any notice of me or suspected of my disguise.—George Sand's Autobiography.

There is a thriving commerce in the township of Freudenstadt, in Baden, the satisfactory condition of which goes to show that communism even may be productive of wealth. The township contains 1420 inhabitants, each of whom has as much wood for building purposes and firing as he wishes, while he can send his cattle out to pasture on the common land during the Summer. Schools, churches, thoroughfares and fountains are all maintained by the commune and every year considerable improvements are made. $25,000 was spent in 1883, for instance, on establishing a new water supply in iron pipes. A hospital, too, has been built and a pavilion in the market place, where the original communal land plays on fete days. The villagers have never paid a single farthing in taxes, but, on the contrary, each year a distribution of the surplus revenue is made among them and each family usually obtains from $12 to $15. All this is done with about 5000 acres of pine forest and meadow land belonging to the township.

The military discipline of Germany is proverbial. About a year ago a traveler in Germany came across an officer employed in superintending some details of military railroad transport. He had been a Captain during the Franco German war and had allowed his company to be surprised. After being imprisoned for eighteen months he was placed in the military railroad service and told that he was never to receive promotion. Being surprised by an enemy is regarded as the one unpardonable sin by the Germans.

"Won't you have another piece of pie Mr. Featherly?" asked Bobby hospitably. His mother was entertaining a few friends at dinner and the dessert was being discussed.

"Thanks, Bobby," Featherly replied, laughingly; "since you are so polite about it, I believe I will take a small piece more."

"All right," said Bobby, "Now, ma, remember your promise. You said if it was necessary to cut into the second pie I could have two pieces."
