

TINY MITES AT TABLE.

Midgets who Bankrupt Unsuspecting Restaurant-keepers.

"Do you know," said a professor of a dime museum, "that Baron Magri, the brother of Count Magri, who wedded Mrs. General Tom Thumb, is also married? The baron is quite as tall as the count, but his wife, a very attractive lady, is six feet one inch high. He has five children who all take after their mother, for some of them are twice as big as he is.

"His eldest son, a lad of eleven years, used to jokingly pretend that he was his father's grandfather. He was so much bigger than his father that the latter was unable to correct him for his mischievous pranks, and had to send him home to Italy to be spanked.

"It would amaze you to know how bright and intelligent these miniature people are. Countess Magri is competent to be a professor at Vassar College, and I warrant you that she could hold her own with Susan B. Anthony and Lillie Devereaux Blake in a debate at a woman-suffrage convention. All the miniature people are very sensitive about being thought small. For instance, General Mite feels as tall as a grenadier in the Queen's Guard, and some of the little ladies pride themselves on being slender and willowy like Kentucky girls.

"All little people are very dignified, and are much hurt at being compared with children and babies. Lucia Zarate, a Mexican miniature woman, becomes quite angry when she is likened to a baby. She is twenty-one years old, a foot and two inches high, and weighs only four pounds and a half, being less than half the size and weight of a baby.

"It is wonderful what good appetites the miniature people have. Tom Thumb ate more than Chang, the Chinese giant. Any of the little folk will eat as much dinner as a man six feet high. Giants, as a rule, have small appetites. When we boarded Chang at one of the large hotels here they thought he would eat a great deal, and so they charged him as much as if he were three men. Instead of going through the bill of fare from beginning to end and then repeating, he ate no more than the average boarder. 'Hungry Joe' could eat more at a cold lunch than Chang could in a whole week. It took three beds, however, to make one bed for him to sleep in, and so we did not complain at paying nine dollars a day for his board.

"I knew a very grotesque-looking South American dwarf, who used to be exhibited as a wild man without language who fed on raw meat, and who was incapable of understanding even signs. Well, after the exhibition was through every night that dwarf used to go over to a restaurant and order all the French dishes on the bill of fare, read a Spanish newspaper, talk French to the waiters, and ask questions of Americans in fluent English. He had an enormous appetite. He didn't weigh much, but he ate like an elephant. He used to polish off three apple-dumplings for dessert.

"Some of the miniature men have been jolly good fellows. I have known some of them who could have put a whole company under the table drinking beer. They have a tolerably easy life of it. A very small dwarf will get $500 a week, or twice as much as a leading man at a New York theater. I have known $800 to be paid for one week's engagement to a phenomenally small dwarf. Of course the dwarf who gets $100 a day may draw $200 a day to the museum.

"Miniature folk sleep about like other people. Some, however, go to bed with the owl and get up with the lark, and are always spry and lively. I find most all miniature people intelligent, genial, and good-natured, pleasant people to know.—N. Y. Morning Journal.

A QUEER PIT IN A PLAIN. What Puzzles the Folks of Ash Fork, Where Water is Half a Dollar a Barrel.

In some sections of the northern portion of Arizona the question of water supply, even for domestic purposes, is a very serious one. This is particularly the case at Ash Fork, a station on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad. A series of very lovely and fertile valleys surround the place, and plenty of grass grows for the support of large herds of cattle, but no water can be had except from an occasional "tank" during the winter season. At Ash Fork the railroad company attempted to sink an artesian well, but after reaching a depth of nine hundred feet the drill became fastened and could not be removed. Many futile attempts were made to extract it, but at last it was abandoned in despair. All water now used at that station and by the residents of the town is brought by rail from Peach Springs, sixty-five miles to the westward, and is sold at fifty cents per barrel.

A short time ago a prospector, stimulated by the inquiry for water, reported that he had discovered a huge well, about eight miles from Ash Fork, sunk in a level plain. Parties at once repaired thither with ropes and other paraphernalia to explore the wondrous discovery. They found the locality, but to this day they do not know the exact nature of the curious cavern that met their gaze. It is located on a level plain and can not be seen until it is approached very near. There is no evidence of earth or rock having been removed from the pit, which was found to be 150 feet in diameter and 320 feet deep, with perpendicular walls. No one in the party was brave enough to descend and explore the "well" when the rope had been lowered, and the explorers returned to Ash Fork scarcely wiser than they were before their trip.

It is certainly a great curiosity, and there possibly exists a supply of water somewhere in its depths or in the numerous caverns or tunnels that apparently emerge into the dark earth below from this curious threshold of sunlight. Tucson (Ariz.) Citizen.

—That pegged shoes and boots are still quite extensively used might be inferred from the fact that a peg-manufacturing company at Bartlett, N. H., is turning out the little wooden articles at the rate of 1,800 bushels a day, and has orders on hand that will require several months to fill.

KEELY'S NEW DISCOVERY.

Perfectly Satisfied That He Has Finally Found the Right Thing.

John W. Keely, with his side-whiskers closely clipped, his face not so rosy as usual, and weighing eighteen pounds less than he did six months ago, sat down yesterday to tell a Record reporter of his latest discovery. As he related the story the discoverer's eyes sparkled and a beam of satisfaction spread over his face when he remarked: "I have at last attained the work of my life. I have discovered the power which for years I sought, and I feel perfectly satisfied now that my discoveries and inventions can go forth to the world. For six months I have worked fourteen and eighteen hours a day." The world saw little of me, because I was locked in my workshop. My new engine is operated upon an entirely different system from anything I ever used before. It will be known as the rotary etheric engine. The power is obtained from inter-atomic air, or rather luminiferous ether—in fact, I have half a dozen terms to apply to it. This new power is under complete control, and is greater in volume by five or six times than gunpowder. Indeed, by multiplied concentration I can make it fifteen times greater. In a recent experiment I obtained 22,800 pounds of pressure to the square inch in eight seconds. No water is used in this engine or to secure this power, air alone being the agent. The introductory receptacle, which holds one half pint of air, required sixty pounds of steel in its construction. I expect (but can not state for a certainty) to give an exhibition in three weeks. This will depend entirely upon the machinists. If they disappoint me I can not tell when it will happen. Next month I will have a perfect engine completed. It will not weigh more than three tons, and will be equal to 500-horse power. The apparatus which is used in connection with the engine is named the liberator."

"How about the Keely Motor Company?"

"It has no interest in the new engine and discovery. A company is to be formed, but I should hardly give the particulars. It will have a capital of $12,000,000, and it is likely that the shares of the Keely Motor Company will be exchanged for one of the new. I will have the controlling interest. The Keely Motor Company has not paid me a penny for two years, and all these discoveries and inventions have been paid for out of my own pocket. To return again to the original subject, I believe that five liberators and engines can supply all the power needed in this city. The power can be stored in tubes and transported anywhere. In about six months, or sooner if possible, I will take out the patents in this country, and then I shall go to Europe, where I desire to exhibit my vibratory lift, the sympathetic lift and several other inventions which the public do not know of.—Philadelphia Record.

AN ASTUTE CANINE.

Funny Story About a San Francisco Dog—A Dog That Knew What Was Needed.

"You talk about dogs," said the Judge, "you talk about dogs—I can tell you the funniest story about a dog."

"Did you know the dog?" said the doctor.

"I did."

"Was it a terrier, or a pointer, or a bull-dog?"

"It was a Dandie Dinmont."

"Good," said the doctor; "they're a very truthful breed."

"This dog belonged to a friend of mine who used always to take him out with him."

"A bad habit," put in the doctor; "you should never let a dog know too much."

"The dog used to wait outside for him when he went in to call on a friend. One night they were a very merry party and they kept it up late. My friend got very drunk. The dog finally got restless and began to howl. A champagne bottle just passed his nose and he smelt it just and shut up. About two o'clock in the morning my friend came out. He said good-night, shut the door, walked in by the garden gate all over the flower-beds, and finally, unable to get out, he lay down on a rose-bush and went to sleep. The dog watched by him till the milkman came along in the morning, picked him up and took him home."

"That's nothing," said the doctor.

"You just wait a minute. Two or three nights later he went and called on his friend again and took the dog with him. The dog waited outside a little while and began to howl. Another champagne bottle was thrown at him. He smelt it, winked to himself, and trotted off. He went home, scratched at the door till the servant girl opened it, attracted my friend's wife's attention, made her follow him to a pile of planks, and whined till they got out a very long and broad one. Then he directed them to where his master was, and when the door-bell rang and the door opened the revelers found the dog, my friend's wife, the servant, and a stretcher. That dog knew what was needed, you bet."—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Zebehr Pasha, who has been arrested by the English Government for collusion with El Mahdi, is believed to have retained and safely invested several million dollars of the immense wealth he possessed in the days of his power at Khartoum. A year ago he spurned contemptuously Gordon's proposition to make him Assistant Governor of the Sudan, prophesied Gordon's destruction and the fall of Khartoum, and added, "Sooner or later I shall return to the Sudan. Allah is great!" He was then living in Cairo with a thousand Nubian retainers about him.

DO YOU MEAN BUSINESS? Well, if you have strength to push your business, it is well. But many a man's business has broken down because the man was broken down, and had no push in him. If you want to make a success, build up your system by the use of Brown's Iron Bitters. Mr. W. M. Winfree, of Petersburg, Va., says: "There is no medicine equal to Brown's Iron Bitters for general debility." It cures dyspepsia, enriches the blood and strengthens the muscles.

HON. WM. D. KELLEY.

A reporter of one of our Philadelphia dailies spent a morning with Philadelpia Kelley at his home in that city. The Judge gave the history of his illness and recovery, substantially as follows:

I had, as a hereditary victim to catarrh, suffered for years. I was subject to violent paroxysms of coughing. Straining for relief had produced abrasion of the membranes and daily effusion of blood from my throat. For four years I passed a portion of each Congressional vacation at the Rocky Mountains on the Pacific coast. But my breathing power continued to diminish, until in the early summer of 1873 it was a little more than a panting for breath. About two years before this my attention had been called to Compound Oxygen. A friend who had great faith in its efficacy advised me to try it. On reading Dr. Starkey's advertisement I threw the little book aside, and declined to resort to the treatment, on the ground that it proposed to cure everything, and was consequently without adaptation to any particular disease. I grew worse, and in the summer my breathing was so short that a cough, a sneeze, or a sigh, produced such acute pain at the base of the left lung that I felt it necessary to close up my affairs, as I did not believe I could last for sixty days. Nor do I now believe I would have lasted for that time had I not found a potent curative agent.

"I had lost none of my prejudices against Compound Oxygen, but in very desperation, seeing that it could not make me any worse than I was, and as medical treatment had utterly failed to meet my case, I concluded to try it. After a thorough examination, Dr. Starkey, to whom I was then a stranger, said: 'Sir, I have no medicine for either form of your disease (alluding to the catarrh and the bleeding at the throat), but, if you will give me time, I can cure you.' My response was a natural one. 'You are frank in saying you have no medicine for either form of my disease, and yet you propose to cure me. By what agency will you work this miracle?' 'The Oxygen Gas,' said he, 'is not a medicine. It has none of the characteristics of medicine compounded of drugs. These create a requirement for continual increase of quantity to be taken; and, if long persisted in, produce more form of disease. But Compound Oxygen produces no appetite for itself. It passes by inhalation into the blood, and purifies and invigorates it. The system is thus enabled to throw off effete matter. You will find by experience, if you try the Treatment, that it will not increase the rapidity of your pulse, though the beating will be stronger upon the surface.'

"This explanation removed my objections, and I could see how such an agent could operate beneficially in cases of a widely different character.

"Dr. Starkey said that the cells of my left lung were congested with catarrhal mucus, and that he believed the gas would once addres itself to the removal of the deposits and the restoration of my full breathing power.

"I began using the Treatment, and at the end of three weeks was able to report an improved appetite, and the ability to sleep several consecutive hours, with a measurable relief of the pain in the lung. Notwithstanding the intense heat, I remained in Philadelphia during the summer. Before Congress assembled in December, my lung had been relieved of much of its nauseous deposit, and I was able to breathe without pain.

"I am now more than ten years older than I was when I first tested Compound Oxygen. I have had no perceptible effusion of blood for more than six years. I breathe as deeply as I did at any period of my young manhood, and my natural carriage is so erect as to elicit frequent comment.

"You ask if I still continue the Treatment. Whenever I feel a fresh cold, or suffer from the nervous exhaustion which follows excessive labor, I resort to Compound Oxygen. I have the highest confidence not only in the Treatment itself, but in Drs. Starkey & Palen as gentlemen of skill and integrity."

PINKEYE.

A Remarkable Cure of a Horse. In the fall of 1887 I had a valuable horse taken with the pinkeye, resulting in blood poisoning. After nine months of doctoring with all the remedies to be found in horse books, I despairing of a cure. His right hind leg was large as a man's body, and had on it forty running sores. He was a most pitiable looking object. At last I thought of Swift's Specific, and commenced its use. It was used for forty days, and the horse was cured. There have been no signs of a return, and the horse has done a mile's work on my farm for several months.

FILES! FILES! FILES! A SURE CURE FOUND AT LAST NO ONE NEED SUFFER.

A sure cure for Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Files has been discovered by Dr. William Leitch. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 20 or 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotion, instruments and electrocures do more harm than good. William's Indian File Ointment absorbs the tumor, allays the intense itching (particularly at night after getting warm in bed), acts as a powerful, quick, instant relief, and is prepared only for Files, itching of the privy parts, and for nothing else.

SIR PETER LUMSDEN.

How He Gained Valuable Information Disguised as a Holy Man.

One of the members of the English legation at Washington furnishes some interesting gossip regarding General Sir Peter Lumsden, of whom the papers speak daily by reason of his relations to the Anglo-Russian boundary question in Central Asia.

"From his youth," said this gentleman, "Lumsden has been a man of war. He first saw it in the service of the East India company, and distinguished himself as a youngster in the terrible meeting of 1857. Having taken for Hindustani dialects he studied them patiently and carefully. In this way General Lumsden acquired a knowledge of the sentiments and character of the rank and file of the Indian army, so that his service to the country has been simply invaluable. When Sir Frederick Roberts was on his way to Candahar a few years ago it was of the utmost consequence that he should have some accurate knowledge of the route, and the forces likely to oppose him in the mountain passes. This information Sir Peter Lumsden, in his own time and way, volunteered to obtain. Three days elapsed and he had not returned, and General Roberts began to be seriously concerned for the safety of his daring staff officer, and finally thought he has been murdered. The General was sitting in his tent late on the afternoon of the fourth day when a dakir, or holy man, suddenly appeared, riding furiously down the mountain side, and wanted to pass the sentinel, who was a grim old Highlander. The sacred man was an extraordinary-looking creature, and the reverse of saintly, as he appeared to European eyes. He was almost naked, the only garment that he wore being a pair of dirty trousers made of goat-skin. His hair nearly reached to his waist as it hung down his shoulders and back, and the lean, brawny arms were covered with a paste made of sandalwood ashes mixed with castor oil, a decoration of peculiar sanctity and a powerful smell. A nosegay of sandalwood, consisting of ninety-nine beads, completed the equipment of this wonderful object. The man dismounted from his beast, whose heaving flanks told of hard riding, and in a dialect of Pushtoo or Afghan asked to see the head sahib. The Highlander did not understand and motioned him back. Just then General Roberts came out, and, keeping a wary eye on his visitor, asked him in Hindustani what he wanted. The visitor, in barbarous jargon, made the General understand that he desired an interview. When they were alone, the dakir said: 'Don't you know me?' It was Lumsden, whose disguise, dirt, wig and all, had been so complete as to be even unsuspected to a man whose intimate friend he had been for ten years.

"Knowing how superstitious the Afghans are, Lumsden had selected a disguise they would not readily question, for they are dreadfully afraid of offending those holy men whose superior sanctity is indicated by a degree of dirtiness that is appalling to the civilized mind. He knew the dialect of the class he represented perfectly, and its religious stock in trade in quotations from the Koran, so whenever he approached an Afghan encampment he dashed fearlessly up to it, yelling: 'Fah Allah Mohammed resoul Allah, the mystic words of the faithful, and, though questioned pretty sharply once or twice, his identity was never suspected. The information he obtained enabled Candahar to be captured, and made the campaign the most successful one ever made amid those bleak mountains, so often fatal to England's arms. For this distinguished service General Lumsden was, in July, 1881, commissioned a Major-General of the Bengal staff, and given a large grant of money, amounting to about $10,000. This is the man whose report and judgment, above all others, rest the chances of war that may change the entire map of Central Asia.'—Washington Post.
