Presidential Proclamation.

The President of the United States has just received the sad tidings of the death of that illustrious citizen and ex-President of the United States, General Ulysses S. Grant, at Mt. McGregor, in the State of New York, to which place he had lately been removed in an endeavor to prolong his life. In making this announcement to the people of the United States, the President is impressed with the magnitude of the public loss of a great military leader, who was in the hour of victory magnanimous, and amid disaster serene and self-sustained; who in every station, whether as a soldier or as a chief magistrate twice called to power by his fellow countrymen, trod unswervingly the pathway of duty, undeterred by doubt, single minded and straightforward. The entire country has witnessed with deep emotion his prolonged and patient struggle with a painful disease, and has watched by the couch of suffering with tearful sympathy. The destined end has come at last, and his spirit has returned to the Creator who sent it forth. The great heart of the nation that followed him with love and pride, bows now in sorrow above him dead—tenderly mindful of his virtues, his great patriotic services and of the loss occasioned by his death.

In testimony of respect to the memory of General Grant, it is ordered that the executive mansion and the several departments in Washington be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, and that public business shall on the day of the funeral be suspended, and the Secretaries of the Navy and of War will cause orders to be issued that appropriate military and naval services be rendered on that day. In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.
Done at the city of Washington this 23d day of July, A. D. 1885, and of the Independence of the United States the 110th.
GROVER CLEVELAND.
By the President,
T. F. BAYARD, Sec. of State.
They Were Both Caught.

A young man living in a small village in Kansas, who had hitherto sustained a good reputation, was arrested recently for robbing the postoffice in his town. His arrest was brought about by a most peculiar circumstance. It seems that he failed to get any postage stamps or money because they were locked up in an iron safe, but in order to make his robbery pay him, as he thought, he appropriated all the letters there were in the office and took them home to read and examine them, expecting to find sufficient money therein to make his raid remunerative.

In going through the letters he found one addressed to his wife, and on reading it was amazed to ascertain that she had a most ardent lover in the person of a neighbor, a married man. The loving expressions found in the letter and the criminality that was apparent almost crazed the husband, and, forgetting his own criminal conduct, he proceeded to give his wife an unmerciful beating, and then went on a hunt for the destroyer of his domestic happiness. Of course, his actions gave him away. He was arrested for robbing the postoffice and was tried and convicted, and has just been sentenced to three years in the penitentiary.

At Eugene.
At Eugene City we stopped thirty minutes. The commencement exercises of the State University were just over and the crowd had come en masse to the depot. Carriages were waiting to take the party out, but the time was so limited that but few went. But alas for their pleasure. A few of these returned in time to help the crowd wave us a good-bye, and the remainder in time to help telegraph to the next station, and we found them all as we came back the next day.
In our limited experience we never saw as handsomely dressed and uniformly fine appearing crowd as that one at Eugene City, and the town seemed to be in keeping.—Dairy and Farm Journal (Iowa).

Proclamation.

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
SALEM, July 23, 1885.
It is my sad duty to announce the death of the ex-chief magistrate of the nation, General U. S. Grant, who died to-day at his temporary residence at Mount McGregor, in the state of New York.
The greater part of his active life having been spent in the service of his country, I trust that all of the people of the State of Oregon will do reverence to the memory of the dead hero and suspend their usual labor on the day of his final obsequies, and in such way as may seem proper, pay the respect that is due our lamented chief tain.
Z. F. MOODY, Governor.
Attest: R. P. EARHART,
Secretary of State.
The Knot Will Be Tied.

"Phlander," said a pretty girl to her bashful beau, "I wish you'd tie this ribbon at my throat; I can't see how to do it without a glass."
"Of course, I'll only be too glad to," he said, and at once grappled the strings.
After an unsuccessful effort of five minutes, during which he got as red as a brick house, and perspired like a pitcher of icewater on a July window sill, he stammered:
"I—I—don't think I can tie a respectable knot, Miss Mary."
"Suppose, Phlander," she whispered with a pretty little blush, "suppose you call in a preacher to assist."
Like the unveiling of a beautiful mystery, the situation unfolded itself to Phlander, and he feels better now.

A Lesson in Grammar.
The New York Sun's grammarian:
"There," said a woman to a tramp, "is a nice dinner, but I shall expect you to saw a little wood for it."
"Certainly, madam," politely replied the tramp, attacking the dinner with both hands, "but you will pardon me, I trust, if I venture to correct your English."
"My what?"
"Your English. The word saw is a verb in this case, singular number and imperfect tense. You can not say, 'I shall expect you to saw wood.' 'I shall expect you to see wood,' is correct. If you will indicate the pile to me I will now look at it as I pass out."

The platform adopted by the Ohio Republicans does not commend itself even to Republican journals. The San Francisco Bulletin calls it "narrow, selfish, and in a sense ill tempered," and declares that it is the work of "small men, utterly incapable of understanding the signs of the times." The Post says the platform will be "ridiculed from one end of the country to the other," and that it is a hodge-podge of odds and ends of poor stump speeches. But our Republican contemporaries must remember that it is here to build a platform for their party now. It has absolutely nothing but the high-tariff idea to trade upon. The issues that gave it being are dead. It may win some local contests, but as a national organization its race is run.

Van Cleve, of the Yaquina Post, thus duns his subscribers, and if they have any manhood at all they will liquidate: Donations of two-dollar-and-a-half gold pieces from warm-hearted friends who admire the brilliant scintillations that habitually flow from our hebdomadal pen (our enemies will be impaled when they get "on to" that), will be received and our autograph kindly returned from this office, daily, between breakfast and supper, until further notice, the object being to raise a colossal mortgage that threatens to topple over with its great accumulation of weighty interest and crush out the life of interested people who have kept a kind and sympathetic eye upon us for many moons.
President Cleveland has appointed colored men as ministers to Hayti and Liberia, as also to other positions, and still our Republican contemporaries are not happy and continue to speak fiercely of the unpleasantness which was concluded over twenty years ago. They would growl if about to be hanged.

Ruth's Interrogations.

[Oregon Vilette.]
"Papa, what did Mr. Roach fail for?"
"For want of fat contracts, I presume, Ruth."
"Wouldn't the Republicans give him any, papa?"
"They were only too willing, but the Democrats have that pleasure at present."
"Wouldn't the Democrats give him any fat contracts either?"
"They don't seem to be able to come to an understanding, my child."
"Was Mr. Roach a Republican, papa?"
"Considerable of one. He was the best friend the Republican party had except the railroads."
"Is he a poor man now, papa?"
"Yes; I expect he will have to put up with great privations and live on the interest of a beggarly million or so."
"Did the Democrats take all his money away from him?"
"No; but they refused to take all his ships but had built for Uncle Sam away from him?"
"What for, papa?"
"Nothing, except to have a navy."
"Didn't the Republicans want a navy?"
"Why no, little daughter, they only wanted to carry the elections."
"Do folks ever fail and get rich, papa?"
"Sometimes, Ruth."
"Don't you think Mr. Roach is rich enough, if he has a million or so?"
"May be."
"Didn't you fail in Ohio a long time ago and come to Oregon a rich man, papa?"
"Here now, you can go up stairs to your mother; I want to read."

Willing to Take Even Chances.

Alongside the roadway near the Jerome Park racetrack a three card monte swindler set up his tripod. James R. Keene, the Wall streeteer, arrived with several friends, and looked on the game. The gambler's pal resorted to the familiar trick of slyly bending the corner of the face card—by that means making it appear that the winning card could be picked out to a certainty. Keene surprised the spectators by saying:
"I'll take you for $50 that I can pick out the jack."
The sum was above the gambler's capital, but he got $40 out of his pockets, and the stakes were put into the hands of an honest bystander.
"Now, my fine fellow," said Keene, "you think you have got a sure thing on me, but you haven't. The chances are exactly even. I shan't choose the bent card, for, of course, that isn't the jack. You've smothered the jack in handling them, and bent one of the others. So the jack must be one of the smooth cards, and in taking this one," and here he placed his hand on a card, "my chances are equal against you. See! Ah! Yes, I've won." He pocketed the stakes and was cheered by the instructed crowd.

The Reason.

To give the public an idea of the value of newspaper space and opinion in San Francisco, the following from the California turf paper, the Spirit of the Times, is published. It don't reflect very favorably upon the San Francisco daily press:
"The reason why we have not expressed an opinion in the Spreckels De Young case, is simply in the fact that we have not been paid to do so. Had Mr. Spreckels published in the Spirit the speeches of Hall McAllister and Mr. Highton at 25 cents per line, the amount paid the weeklies, or $1 per line as paid the Call, or $150 per column as paid the Bulletin, we should have undoubtedly given De Young fits, and stood up for Spreckels, or if De Young had given us Campbell's speech to print under the same circumstances, we should doubtless have stood up for De Young and given Spreckels fits. It would have depended entirely upon which card the coin was placed. We do not wish to be considered any different from our confreres in the profession; we are all too ethereal for this earth, and yet we are on it."
