A Brave Girl Indeed.

(Philadelphia Chronicle.) Just as a Philadelphia lover had dropped on his knees and began popping the ques-tion, a pet poodle, who thought the pro-ceedings rather strange, made a dash for him. With remarkable nerve for a woman the girl reached over, grabbed the dog by the neck, at the same time calmly uttering, "Go on, George, dear, I'm listening to what you are saying."

Carressing a Brother-in-Law. [Peck's Sun].

At Passaic, N. J., last week, an emigrant girl was married, and when her husband refused to pay the bride's brother the expense of her passage to America, he seized his sister and held her for security of the debt. For a moment the husband was stag-gered, but it suddenly dawned upon him that the minister had given her to him for his ownest own, and he fondled and caressed his brother-in-law to such an extent that while a carriage took the bride and groom inlone direction the patrol wagon carried the brother in another

BAGPIPES

A Natural Interpretation Not Justified by the Pacis.

It appears that it is all a mistake to assume that oatmeal is the cause of the national Scotch dyspepsia. The natural interpretation of the facts that the Scotch eat oatmeal and suffer from dyspepsia is that oatmeal produces dyspepsis. When the Times expressed this opinion it did so in perfect good faith, but now that a real Scotchman, who is an expert in dyspepsia, not only denies that oatmeal is indigestible, but explains in a perfect satisfactory way the true cause of Scotch dyspepsia, it would be dishonest not to proclaim the innocence of oatmeal. Dyspepsia among Scotchmen is the result of listening to the bagpipes, and the moment this as-sertion is made its truth becomes almost self-evident. It may be urged by ignorant persons that the impression of a sound received on the tympanum of the ear can not affect the stomach. This is, of course, entirely untrue. It is a well-established fact that certain songs will produce nausea on the part of sensitive hearers. Excursionists on their way to Rockaway by sea have often been made violently sick by hearing the steamer's band play "Whoa, Emma," and a physician of this city has frequently prescribed "Dites lui" as an emetic in cases of poisoning.

It is a well-attested fact that the bagpipes, when heard by persons who are not accustomed to them, give rise to violent groing pains in the stomach which closely resemble the pains of Asiatic cholera. During the Sepoy mutiny the Scotch regiments more than once placed large bodies of Sepoys hors de combat by the use of the bagpipes alone. Had not Havelock's little army included a strong corps of pipers it could never have made its way into Lucknow through the vast besleging force. Mr. Whittier speaks of the pipes at Lucknow as "stinging all the plain to life." The Sepoys would hardly have described in that way the effect of pipeplaying. As a matter of fact, thousands of rebels, as soon as they heard the bagpipes, clasped their hands to their abdomin' regions and rolled on the plain in agony. Even those whose stomachs withstood the sound imagined that the Sepoy camp had suddenly been smitten with cholera, and became so demoralized that Havelock forced his way through the midst of them almost unmolested, and reached the residency without other casualties than the death of two wounded Englishmen, who were officially reported to have died with joy at seeing the relieving force, but who were really too weak to withstand the bagpipes. Scottish children suffer severely from Scottish children suffer severely from the bagpipe colic, and no careful mother will allow a baby in arms to hear the pipes. When the Scotch children reach the age of three or four years they are gradually hardened to the sound of the bagpipes, and though at first they are fairly doubled up with pain, they are able in time to listen to "The Wild McGregor Clancell" without betraying any signs of call" without betraying any signs of uneasiness. The bagpipe colic is never fatal except to infants and persons in a very weak condition, and Scotch physicians occasionally prescribe a course of pipes to patients suffering from obesity. Her Majesty the Queen has tried this remedy with apparently good results, though it is difficult to believe that its permanent effect upon her

No man, not even a Scotchman, suffer for years from colic without having his digestive organs impaired. When a young Scotchman has accustomed his stomach to hear bagpipes without pain it may be safely assumed that his stomach is so weakened as to be totally unfit to digest ordinary food. In these circumstances it is possible that oatmeal is well adapted to the abnormal state of his digestive organs. At any rate, oatmeal can no longer be held to be the cause of Scotch dyspepsia, and there is good reason to believe that Carlyle owed his dyspepsia to his early exposure to bagpipes.—N. Y. Times.

BILL NYE. His Observations On the Matter of Rallway Etiquette.

If you have been reared in extreme poverty, and your mother supported you until you grew up and married, so that your wife could support you, you will probably sit in four sents at the same time with your feet extended into the aisles so that you can wipe them off on other people while you snore with your mouth open clear to your shoulder-

If you are prone to drop to sleep and breathe with a low, death-rattle, like the exhaust of a bath-tub, it would be a good plan to tie up your head in a feather-bed, and then insert the whole thing in the linen-closet, or if you can not secure that you might stick it out of the window and get it knocked off against a tunnel. In the morning is a good time to find out how many people have succeeded in getting on the passenger train who ought to be in the stock car. Generally you will find one male and one female. The male goes into the wash-room, bathes his worthless car-cass from daylight until breakfast-time, walking on the feet of any man who tries to wash his face during that time. He wipes himself on nine different towels, because when he gets home he knows he will have to wipe his face on an old door-mat. People who have been reared on hay all their lives generally want to till themselves full of pie and colic when they travel. The female of this same mammal goes into the ladies' department and

out. Then the real ladies have about thirteen seconds a piece in which to If you never rode in a varnished car before, and never expect to again, you will probably roam up and down the car, meandering over the feet of the porter while he is making up the berths. This is a good way to let the people see just how little sense you had left after your brain began to soften.—Pretset's

NEWSPAPER OFFICE ETIQUETTE.

Few Simple Rules for the Guidan of Visitors

It frequently happens that visitors to newscaper offices do and say things which are improper, and rude, and annoying. The really not the slightest idea that he is making himself disagreeable, for the reason that he is not accustomed to newspaper etiquetta. For this reason we wish to throw out a few hints that will enable the visitor to avoid mintentionally giving offense.

When you enter the printing office do not handle the type in the cases. If you wish to examine the type say so to the printer, and he will be glad to stop his work and empty the case out on the editor's table, where you

He will be glad to empty the case. can sit in his chair and examine the type at your leisure. Never mind putting back the type, the printer can do that after you got brough.

Don't read the proof sheets, clippings or manuscript. If you want to know what is going to appear in the next paper, ask the editor to read out aloud to you. He has plenty of time, and will be grateful to you for the chance to quit his work and entertain you. If you want to look over the cash book, make the editor go and get it for you. Never ask for a sample copy, but take half

Never spit tobacco juice on the floor; ways spit on the exchanges or on the walls, otherwise the editor will think you are not accustomed to a newspaper office. Make the editor feel that his presence does not annoy you.

Never ask for any old exchanges. Just help yourself to the unorened ones, for they always contain much later news than those that have been opened.

Ask the editor, if you are a perfect stra to him, to supply you with a duplicate key to his post office box, so you can get his papers regularly. If he is a gentleman he will far nish you with a duplicate key without your asking, but some editors are not gentlemen.

[St. James Gazette.] A gentleman who some years ago acted as manager for a distinguished actrees who plays in four languages and is charming in all of them, has confessed to an interviewer that an the beginning of this lady's theatrical career she was poor and had not a single diamond in her possession. Every one knows that the majority of great actresses and that the majority of great actresses and singers have many diamonds; and it is therefore natural for a certain section of the public to conclude that the lady be has no diamonds is not a great actress. The lack of gems told heavily for a time against the success of the first American tour of this lady. One day at Montreal the manager saw in a shop window a develop restaurable and the success of the first American tour of this lady. shop window a dazzling paste necklace, the price of which was $35. He bought it and at once procured a handsome iron safe to keep it. In Chicago, the next halting place, the safe was solemnly intrusted to the hotel clerk, together with the information that it contained diamonds to the value of $90,000, which had been presented to the great actress by the czar. The diamonds were soon the talk of the city. The papers had paragraphs about them; the people went to the theatre to see them; when they saw them they also saw the actress; and the lady did not neglect her opportunities. Such was the origin of her popularity.

[Boston Beacon.]

A good old deacon in Connecticut was very pious and very fond of clams. When once upon a time he attended a Rhode Island clambake he overtaxed his capacity and was sorely distressed. But his faith in prayer was unabated. Leaving the party and going down on his knees behind a tree he was heard to supplicate.
