A Fatal Narcotic.

Senator Beck, of Kentucky, was asked about his views on civil service reform, the other day, and he made answer as follows:

"I should perhaps take more interest in the matter if I had not watched the career of young men who have come to Washington during the sixteen years I have been there. They lose their manhood trying to keep in or to get back, and in ten years are worse off than if they had gone, like my son, to a ranch or breaking stones out here in the street. I am sorry to have any young friends of mine want to go to Washington, but they get set on it and go they will. They wear swallow-tail coats and all that is grand, but it doesn't amount to a d—."

Commenting on this emphatic utterance of the Kentucky Senator, the Salt Lake Tribune very aptly said: "Every young man who feels a craze for office growing within him should read the foregoing. He should then paste it in his hat and read it daily until he commits it to memory, and every time the evil spirit returned to him he should exorcise it by repeating the above.
When a man is called upon by his fellow men to occupy an honorable office and he is sure the call is made because the evidence which his past life supplies that he will use the office, if he obtains it, as a trust for the people, unless he has good reasons to the contrary he should accept. But when a young man who has done nothing as yet to prove his manhood and his worth, gets to think that he must have an office, he is on the direct road to ruin. He, in fact, announces his willingness to get into a groove and to follow it until he cannot get out, and if he after a while is tossed out, he is lost.
He cannot once in a hundred times regain the place which he lost when he took the office. His courage is broken; his horizon is contracted; his eyes have grown perverted, and obstacles which before he would have smiled at now take on colossal forms. A false pride has been engendered. If a way is opened for him through which, by beginning at the bottom round, he might mount upward and soon be in the sunlight of prosperity, that pride whispers to him that after holding the official position which was once his, it would be a humiliation to accept such service, and he has no longer the courage to conquer himself. For a young man to acquire thirst for office is only one remove above possessing an insatiable appetite for opium smoking."

Mah Jim, the celestial murderer of a countryman, will take his departure from this city December 4th, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.
He will not take a return certificate, like many of his countrymen, for trading purposes, but will go direct and to stay. He looks anything but a murderer, and is not yet 21 years of age.
Before sentence was passed he said he was innocent, and that it was a put up job. The judge then passed sentence, and the chances are that he will have a speedy passage, free of charge, to a home port.—Portland Siftings.

The Oregon Railway and Navigation Company have just completed two first-class snow sheds at Pyle canyon, one of which is 960 feet long, and the other 500. A third shed is being erected at the same point. The grade has been widened and the track moved out from the embankments where the snow was liable to drift.

Saving a Life.

A special dispatch from Akron, O., of October 29th, says: Two days of excitement has stirred up the enterprising town of Peninsula, twelve miles from here, and the wildest scenes have been the order on the streets to-day.
The populace round about has gathered in the place as though a fair was being held, on account of a desperate effort to keep life in the body of Anton Pfaus, a German about 40 years old.
Pfaus sent his little boy on Tuesday to a drug store for quinine, but instead the clerk by mistake gave him morphine. Pfaus took five grains of the deadly drug and soon became violently sick. At last the neighbors were aroused and desperate efforts made to keep the breath in the sick man. The physicians attempted to make him vomit, but his stomach refused to give up its contents.

Wednesday morning physicians from Akron were called and found Pfaus in a state of narcosis, the pupils of his eyes being contracted so that they had almost entirely disappeared. When the physicians arrived Pfaus was being run up and down a half mile stretch as fast as two attendants could drag him along. Every man, woman and child in town was upon the streets. Business was suspended and the course had the appearance of a foot race being held. As soon as two men had covered the course two other men took up the subject and trotted him to the other end of the track. Fully 100 men were engaged in this exercise, which was kept up for ten hours, when Pfaus began to show slight signs of consciousness. Electric batteries were applied in a vigorous manner, and, occasionally, in making the run, the sick man was set upon his head and held in that position for some time. Then, falling into the hands of more excitable men, he was rolled about on the ground and pounded till his flesh was badly bruised. At last he began to utter some sounds, and the first words spoken were a challenge to fight the crowd, but his faithful friends hustled his limp body over the street until respiration was quite easy, when he was taken from the street to his house, having run many miles.

While hunting horses the other day on Jones creek, says the Grant's Pass Courier, Antoine Becker encountered a black bear, which was disposed to dispute his right of way. Mr. Becker being a liberal man, and thinking bruin might be hungry, threw his lunch at him, but he would not go. He then threw a rope at him, when the animal showed fight. Becker took refuge behind a log and awaited a further attack, which was soon made by the bear.
With nothing to defend himself with but a small pocket-knife, Mr. Becker prodded the bear a few times in the neck, and finally made his escape.
These animals are quite plentiful this year, and seemingly enjoy themselves having a good time with the boys.

"You stole that article."—Portland News. "You stole that dispatch."— Portland Oregonian. "You stole that item."—Portland Standard. The above is a synopsis of a discussion that has been going on for some time among Oregon's metropolitan papers. For heaven's sake, cease it! What did you fellows buy your shears and paste pot for, if not to use! If some one had stolen your shears and paste oyster-can, then you would have had something to kick about.—Pendleton Tribune.

It is estimated that the 450 Chinamen who sailed from Portland, Wednesday, on the Coloma, took on an average $500 apiece, making a total of $225,000. This is money taken out of the United States never to return, and might as well have been taken to the middle of the Pacific and cast overboard. If it had been paid to American mechanics and laborers, it would have been retained in the country as active circulating medium.—Portland News.

A College Lark.

A Boston special of October 29th says: A bet of $50 was made by a party of Harvard students a few days ago that one of their number, C. W.
Tyler of '86, could not walk from Cambridge to Worcester, forty-four miles, in twenty hours. The bet was taken and to-day was set for the trial. Tyler is a large man, weighing 200 pounds.
The betters accompanied him. The start was made at 4 A. M. Unknown to Tyler, his friends procured some large posters bearing in bold letters the following inscription:

Attention! Worcester's winged wonder will pass through this place today on his great walk from Boston to Worcester for the championship of New England. Be ready to receive him.
Just before reaching the towns through which he was to pass, Tyler's friends would drive ahead and post one of the notices in a conspicuous place, and when the walker arrived his entrance into the town would be greeted with warmth, a reception which, while gratifying to his sense of vanity, was most annoying to his rapid progress.
At last accounts the would-be champion of New England was wending his weary way in a driving rainstorm toward his destination.

How to Make Money.

Some papers are not of much account as to appearance, but I never took one that did not pay me, in some way, more than I paid for it.

One time an old friend started a little paper away down in southwestern Georgia and sent it to me, and I subscribed just to encourage him, and after a while it published a notice that an administrator had an order to sell several lots at public outcry, and one of the lots was in my county. So I inquired about the lot, and wrote to my friend to attend the sale and run it up to $50. He did so, and bid me off the lot for $30, and I sold it in a month to a man it joined for $100; and so I made $68 clear by taking that paper.

My father told me that when he was a young man he saw a notice in a paper that a school teacher was wanted away off in a distant county, and he went there and got the situation, and a little girl was sent to him, and after a while she grew up very sweet and pretty, and he fell in love with her and married her. Now, if he had not taken that paper, what do you think would have become of me! Wouldn't I have been some other fellow, or maybe not at all!—Lowell Courier.

Frank James, the ex-bandit, recently played a practical joke. A Kansas man had an enemy and wanted him killed. He wrote to James and asked him to do the job. He offered $100.
James accepted and the Kansas man came to see him. All the arrangements were made and the money put up. Then James told the man that he had reformed and would not do the job. He threatened the fellow with arrest if he did not let his neighbor alone and made him promise to keep the peace and mind his own business.

The vision of an elegant bar and lunch counter in one of the committee rooms in the State Capitol brightens when Henry Failing's name is mentioned in connection with the U. S.
Senate. The layout was grand at the last session of the Legislature and everybody got in and enjoyed himself, but the whisky was not strong enough to drop the members. Henry will have to condense his liquor and double the dose for the extra session.—Union Sentinel.

The first session of the 49th Congress will meet on Monday, December 7. The Senate will consist of 41 Republicans, 34 Democrats, and 1 vacancy (Oregon). The House will have 140 Republicans, 182 Democrats, 1 Greenback-Labor, 1 fusionist and 1 vacancy.
