

THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE.

The Old, Old Story Plainly and Briefly Retold.

THE MAN WITH A COUNTRY.

Some of the Difficulties Attending the Construction of a Lawn.

This is the time of year when the man with a country meditates upon his lawn. If he be a suburban resident of long standing and experience he is in a tranquil mood. His lawn flourishes in luxuriance of grass without meretricious display of tawdry flowers of the field. Life-giving fertilizers have enriched the turf in the late autumn or early spring, and given a deeper tone to its tint. The heavy roller has been trundled up and down and left the lawn as level as a dancing floor. The gravel paths have been reduced to curves of beauty and the borders pointed and trimmed with painstaking care. Obtrusive weeds have been cut out with timely vigilance and the hollows filled out with verdure. The lawn-cutter has been rattling unceasingly over the sward, keeping the grass closely shaved and thickening it until it is now like a fine-woven velvet carpet, beautiful to the eye and without a flaw or patch in its texture. Tall trees have skirted the lawn and shielded it from too fierce sunlight, prolonging the influence of morning dews and making the ground soft and springy. The man with the country feels that the lines have fallen into him in pleasant places. A grateful stretch of green checked with sunlight and shade from overhanging foliage refreshes his eyes when he returns from the city in the evening. His Sundays are days of rest, attuned to what Mr. Whistler would term a symphony in green. Lingering on his piazza until the trees lose their outlines in the fading summer twilight and the hush of night settles down, he wonders how the city man manages to exist without a country of his own.

But landscape gardening has its amateurs as well as its seasoned veterans. If the man with a country be a newcomer on land long neglected, he spends a sad summer wondering what the harvest will be. In the rawness of his inexperience he has fancied that a lawn may be produced as easily as a piazza floor can be painted or a cellar wall whitewashed. In the beginning he resolved to be thorough and to follow scrupulously the regimen and treatment prescribed by competent authorities in landscape gardening. He had his ground plowed, harrowed, spaded, raked, levelled and rolled. He had clay and loam underlaid and overlaid. He scattered Central Park grass-seed by the bushel. He tilled the borders of paths and all out-of-the-way corners close to the house. He employed three or four men for a month in the early spring at a reckless rate of expense. He kept the seed-seller's circular headed "How to get a lawn in two months" constantly under his eyes and never swerved a hair's breadth from the directions. As soon as the tiny blades began to appear he set both roller and cutter in operation. He was unremitting in his exertions to make the grass grow. But the grass has resisted all importunities. If it has come up in patches, here a little and there a little less, it has speedily shriveled under the glare of the sun or been choked out by the encroachments of the rank and thrifty set of weeds. Luxuriance of vegetation he has had from the outset, but no Central Park grass. Watering has only served to stimulate the fierce energies of wild grass, dandelions and the commonest and ugliest of wayside weeds. The man with a country, rising early and peeping out of his bedroom window to see if happily the grass has come up during the night, is horrified to descry through the white mist black masses of variegated rankness that have sprung up like Jonah's gourd.

Advice the man with the new country receives in large measure, the greater part of it retroactive. Fall plowing and harrowing, unlimited fertilizers in early spring, and a sprinkling of oats in the original seeding are now out of the question. He is told to sow white clover, which will grow rapidly and kill out the weeds, and he does so; but the white clover fails to appear after three weeks' patient vigil, and the vigorous weeds profiting by constant cutting are constantly thickening out and covering the ground with a coarse and tangled matting. Sympathetic neighbors advise him not to mind the weeds, but to keep the lawn-cutter in motion, since in the long run they can not stand frequent cutting, while the grass thrives under it. But the trouble is that the weeds do not mind it either; and there is neither grass nor clover, only the bare ground, to compete with them. Thoughtful observers explain the failure of the lawn by the absence of great shade trees, the young grass being withered before it has time to get root. But shade can not be extemporized. Big trees can not be erected at a moment's notice, and a lavish use of canvas covering and tent poles would be painfully suggestive of a country circus. No; the man with the new estate feels that it is a hopeless matter. He has indeed carpeted his lawn at greater expense than the new carpets and curtains which his wife was anxious to have him buy, but it is a torn and patched rag carpet, unsightly to the eye. He is doomed to desultory reeding and melancholy reflections. His meat is tears. He mournfully confesses that all flesh is grass and human hopes as the flowers of the field.—N. Y. Tribune.

—I was gwine up-town in a Bleeker street kyah de odder day, when I see a lady drop a five-dollar bill in de box. She looked at me an' says: 'M stah, what'll I do? I put a five-dollar bill in dat box.' I says: 'Speak to de drivah an' he'll fix it.' So she goes to de drivah, and she says: 'Drivah, I've put a five-dollar bill in de box. What shall I do?' Interlocutor:—'Well, s'r, what did de drivah say?' 'Oh, he was all right. He tole her to wait untill he got to de stable and he'd give her de horse.'—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

—The value of an oath. [Albany Express] Judge (to darkey witness)—Do you know de nature of an oath? Witness—Sah! Judge—Do you understand what you are to swear to? Witness—Yes, sah. I'm to swar to tell de truf. Judge—And what will happen if you do not tell de truf? Witness—I 'spects our side 'll win de case, sah.

—What a Postage Stamp Out of Place Means. [Milwaukee Sentinel] One of these "language of flowers" and "language of handkerchiefs" sort of ninnies asks us what it means when a postage stamp is put on some other part of the letter than the right-hand upper corner. It means that the stamp clerk who is delayed in his work by it would like to kick the person who does it all over the distributing room.
