For the Boys.

The way a boy uses his leisure determines what sort of a man he will be. Two men stood at the same table in a large factory in Philadelphia, working at the same trade. Having an hour for their nooning every day, each undertook to use it in accomplishing a definite purpose; each persevered for the same number of months and each one succeeded at last. One of these two mechanics used his daily leisure hour in working out the invention of a machine for sawing a block of wood into almost any desired shape. When his invention was complete he sold the patent for a fortune, changed his workman's apron for a broadcloth suit and moved out of a tenement house into a brown-stone mansion. The other man—what did he do? Well, he spent an hour each day during most of a year in the very difficult undertaking of teaching a little dog to stand on his hind feet and dance a jig while he played a tune. At last accounts he was working ten hours a day at the same trade and at his same old wages, and finding fault with the fate that made his fellow-workman rich while leaving him poor. Leisure minutes may bring golden grain to to mind as well as purse, if one harvest wheat instead of chaff.

A Convict's Cash.

Good luck loafs along at a snail's pace while misfortune bows along swiftly and strong. Billy Darragh resided at the Cascades and was a cripple. He was not so badly broken up, however, but that he was still able to furnish bad whisky to the poor Indians who would get beastly drunk and raise particular Sheol on the shoals of the Columbia. Billy was overhauled and brought to Portland and paid a fine. He went back again a wiser man, supposedly, yet a short time ago he was again caught, and the austere Judge sent the festive William to the Pen for a year. The second day after he entered his new secluded life, he fell heir to $10,000 in gold while his father was enriched to the tune of $75,000. Alas poor William, with that amount of wealth in bank and so much able bodied mirth floating around waiting to be bought by just such fellows, it must be hard indeed.

In a recent article in the North American Review Dorman B. Eaton shows that the classified service for which competitive examinations are required, includes 5,650 places in the departments, 5,600 in the postal service, or nearly half the whole number of postal clerks and carriers, and five-sevenths of the custom officials; making a total of 13,950. Since July 16, 1883, when the system went into operation, more than 11,000 persons have been examined in different parts of the country, and from those who rank highest upwards of 2,600 have been appointed. The average age of applicants was thirty years. Out of 5,556 whose records are complete, 3,920 received their only education in the common schools, while but 449 had been educated in college. These facts dispose of certain foolish sneers. College graduates do not appear to be crowding into the service. The successful contestants have been divided about equally between the great political parties, and this result demonstrates the fairness of the system.

Colonel McBride Sumpter of Austin while in New York, dropped into a fashionable restaurant, and having surprised his stomach with a small repast, asked the waiter what was the damage. On being told Colonel Sumpter handed out a $5 bill, but on receiving back his change he made the ghastly discovery that there was a dime missing. He demanded an explanation from the waiter who was a Frenchman. "Zo dime is for my doeur." "I didn't order any and I won't pay for it," retorted Sumpter. "I mean, sore, zo dime is for my pour boire." "It's for your poor boy is it? That's a different thing. I didn't know you had sickness in your family. Here's a quarter for him, poor fellow." —Philadelphia News.

The Chinese Language.

London Athenaeum.

A language which has only some 400 and odd distinct sounds with which to express 10,000 words would appear at first sight to be a very anomalous condition. And as a matter of fact, many of these words are synonymous although by an ingenious system of inflection of the voice the number of separate sounds—to a Chinese ear, at least—is more than trebled. These inflections are the tones. In Peking there are only four of them; but in the south those who are knowing in such matters declare there are twelve or more. It is obvious that where the sense of a word depends on such a nice distinction as the tone of the voice in which it is uttered, the opportunities for making blunders become boundless.

Lawson Lawrence, colored, of Eufaula, Alabama, is one hundred and three years old. His present wife is fifty years old, he having married her when she was a "gal," as he expressed it. She is his ninth wife, and, in reply to the question of how many children he had, he said he had been accused of having one hundred and seventeen and it was not for him to dispute it. Last year he cultivated twenty acres of land and raised an abundance of peas, corn and potatoes. This year he is cultivating cotton. He lives within a quarter of a mile of White Pond, Barbour county, where he has been for the past eleven years. He labors during the week and preaches Sunday, being pastor of the Mount Zion Methodist Church.

Horace W. Ogilvie has finished the survey of the Oregonian Railway Co., limited, to Dundee. The distance as surveyed is 26 1/2 miles to South Portland and is 28 miles to the heart of the city. This is one mile shorter than was expected. The line as surveyed will pass through Elk Rock through a tunnel 180 feet long. This rock is situated 5 1/2 miles south of Portland, near the White House. It rises perpendicular to a height of 350 feet, and its base is submerged by 90 feet of the Willamette river. It is the intention to commence work on and finish the tunnel this winter, and push the road to completion in the spring.

The most sagacious sheep in North Carolina is an old ram that belongs to J. A. Adcock, in Sandy creek township. He cannot only distinguish the persimmon trees from trees of other growth in the pasture, but has learned to get the fruit down from them. This he does by butting the tree. He gets off a suitable distance, stands on his hind legs, as if in the position of fighting, and strikes the tree a vigorous blow with his head. When he has shaken the persimmons off he quietly eats them and goes on his way until his appetite demands more. This wise old ram used to rob the apple trees in the same way.

The Independence West Side says: "We learn that Capt. Saunders has determined to plead his own cause before the circuit court next March. Whether he will plead the cause of his confederates and accomplice or not is unknown. Saunders is a regular graduate of a law school and has been admitted to the law. A number of attorneys have tendered their services which were declined by him. Saunders has written to a friend in this city that he committed the act in self defense and in the defense of Miss Allison's honor.

At Weimar, Texas, is published a paper named the Gimlet. To its credit it does not try to bore an augur hole.
