WALKING.

The Pleasures Experienced by the Intelligent l'edestrian.

We have people amongst us who consider walking vulgar, and who imagine that they would lose their dignfty if they left their carriage. They do not object to be driven through the country, either in diligence or coach and pair, and have the scenery served up to them like fresh varieties on a fete day or new paintings in this season's exhi itions; but to ask them to tread the same quartz-grit on the hard highway which the common tramp claims freedom of, is to offer them an indignity which their lofty souls resent. After all, if we are not mistaken, the free, unfettered tramp if he has anything like an observant spirit has the best of He can make levies on all nature. For him the sunshine has a greater joy, and the moon in the falling twi-light a less cold smile. The jolly mil-ler can give him the merry laugh and the frankest hospitality; while the grandee is permitted to roll past in his carriage without having touched such Arcadian sweets. For him is the flower-fringed by-path in the sheltering wood and for him the moss-wreathed wayside well. The plow-boy's whistle and the milkmail's song" are his by preser prive right; and if he can bear with him a pure heart, a love for honest labor, and a reverence for the Giver of all good we think that he is happier than his richer neighbor who dare not go aloot.

No one looks so kindly and so lovingly on nature as he who walks. A long stretch on foot in the open country, in the face of the bugle-breezes of morn, in the full glory of noonday, or in the tender, fating luster and sacred shadows of twilight is a human experience that tends alike to be-tow physical strength and intellectual power and joy. The man who walks abroad with a keen eye and a receptive soul will get in one day more of the beauties of nature in all their rounded perfection-in color, in tint, and in sound-than he could obtain by the study of books through many a silent and thoughtful night. No matter the season of nature. and no matter the mood, she is always shining and fair, even when she falls into her winter sleep of untainted and untouched silence, covered over with snow-wreaths of exquisite purity. curve and grace. And what for mat-hless outline and tint can equal a snow-wreath lying across your path on a crisp, c ear winter afternoon, with the western sky as ruddy and aglow like molten ore, and the solemn pine trees Ifting their dark green feathery brances mitway between the unsull ed stretch of snow and the deep azure of the holy twilight coming from the east, bringing with it the silent, friendly stars? Do you think that the term 'Iriendly' is out of place with reference to the stars? I hope not. How those glorious lights look down upon us with lingering. loving luster from the midnight sk es! Each one seems as if it were an angel's eye gazing on us w th watchful care.
