They WIII Never Do So Again. [Margaret Vandergrift in The Century.] The maiden aunt, in her straight-tacked

With a flush on ber pale and wrinkled And a horrified, mortified, mystified air, Was just about to speak.

And the mailen niece, a nice little maid-Stood meekly twirling her thumbs With a half-triumphant, half-afraid, And wholly be witening pout.

Said the maiden aunt: "Will you please explain What your heads were doing so close to

You could easily, I assure you, Jane, Have knocked me down with a feather! "When I think of your bringing up-my

My scrupulous care-and it's come to Appeared to be sitting calmly there, And letting a Young MAN KISS you!

"Now tell me at once just what he said, And what you replied. This is quite a trial: So do not stand there and hang your head, Or attempt the least denial!

"If I catch you once more in such a-fix, Though you are 18, I can tell you. Jane, I shall treat you just as if you were 6, And send you to school again!

"Are you going to tell me what he said, And what you said! I'll not stand this So look at me, Jane! Lift up your head!

Don't go as if you were stifling!"

Her voice was shaken-of course, with fear; "He said-he said: Will you have me, June! And I said I would. But, indeed, aunt, dear, We'll never do so again!"

> Overheard at the Horse Show. [Life.]

"Well, what of it! I have as much right to be here as your old horsz."

You may not think I am a Shetland pony, but I am; only I have been to the barber's."

"This hurdle jamping may be fun for the spectators, but it is serious business for us."

She Would Make a Good Wife. [Columbus Dispatch.]

They sat in the library alcove, And they gazed at the bundreds of books; And she gave, in exchange for his sighings, The sweetest and suyest of looks.

"Here are volumes of very great value. And you," be remarked, "are well versed; Now, supposing a fire should break out here Which book would you try to save firs.?'

"I would seize" -and she grew quite excited.

And then she grew terribly calm -"I would seize papa's pocketbook first, si; That's the kind of a bookworm I am!"

> Final. [Lowell Courier.]

It is very true, as you off will find, That a woman's "No" is not her mind; But when you hear, as your pleadings end-

"I shall always prize you as a friend, Shall value your triendsnip," and such as that,

The answer is final, you can take your hat,

Brevities. Binghampton Republicin - "She loved, alas, she loved mel soe loved me era weened," gushes some ninny of a versifier, We think if she had waited until after he was weened before loving him, and that process were deferred until after his exit from calchood, the poet would die unloved.

Exchange: Professor of Chemistry-Suppose you were called to a patient who had swallowed a heavy dose of oxalic acid, what would you administer! Jones (who is preparing for the pulpit, and who only takes chemistry because it is obligatory)-I would administer the sacrament.

New York Worll: Mr. John Meecham, a merchant of Mempais, objected to cpaning the new stock exchange in that city with prayer, although he was informed that the institution would specially deal with futures, and he irreverendy remarked that he would as soon think of opening a jacapot with prayer.

Texas Siftings: The Servians are advancing cautiously into Turkey territory. The more cautious toe Servians are the better for them, otherwise they may duplicate the experience of the inquiring man who thrust his hand into a horse's mouth to see how many teeth he had. The horse closed his mouth to see how many fingers the man had. Exchange: "Oh, George, how superlatively still, clear and beautiful is the night," she whispered, leaning her finely veined temple against his coat collar; "now soothing, how restful!" "Yes," he replied, toying with her chestnut aureole hair, what a night to shoot cats." Waif; A man in Long Wood, F.a., re-cently exchanged a weekly paper to: a mula. This trais was not so inappropriate as it would seem at first blush. They are both elevators of the human race.

THE OVER-NEAT WOMAN

Cleanliness and Neatness Desirable, But Not Over-Particularity.

Of all the various kinds of dispositions in women, the too particular female is one of the most uncomfortable to live with. Methinks I see her now, always accompanied with a scrubbing brush and a pail or broom. It would be a sin in her estimation if some one of the carpets was not up at at least once a week. She is up long before daylight, and will not let anybody else sleep because she isn't like some lazy people she knew who ate breakfast at eight o'clock. She has a certain routine for every day in the week, and nothing, excepting perhaps death, shall interfere with it. Such a washing of windows, cleaning of paint and scrubbing of floors, besides the thousand and one other things to be attended to in a household, as are gone through with by such a woman is enough to make one's hair turn gray with the mere thought. If you visit her she is apt to be always looking at your feet to see if you wiped them clean; and if you take a child along you are in misery the whole time, for fear the little one may displace a chair or touch something that may displease the host-You ask her to return the call and she will likely answer that she has no time for gadding, or that her house-hold duties are enough to occupy her time. She don't see how Mrs. Jones across the way can find so much time for going out. She must neglect her house in a shameful manner. And yet people who have visited Mrs. Jones report that there is nothing strikingly county, dirty about her house. The fear of a Sever little dust collecting without her knowing it will make the particular woman anxious and nervous, and this, with the great strain produced by the overwork, will soon break down her health, her spirits and her temper. Her children have an instinctive habit of huddling together in a corner and talking in whispers, and of keeping an eye on mother to see if she is going to find some fault with them. If they want to play they must go out of doors. You never see little wagons, dolls and picture books scattered around the floor in that house. "My children must be orderly and have a place for everything and everything in its place." I am afraid that they obey to the letter the latter part of the last sentence, for they dare not take anything out of its place. Poor little things! there are no romps in that home; everything is order, order. Now, what is the use of being so very near? It does not benefit you; on the other hand, it simply John Peterson. makes you look old and careworn and spoils your disposition. It destroys the free course of feeling that should exist between mother and children. For constant fault-finding will frighten your children and they will repress their feelings instead of sharing them with you. You may be a good housekeeper months to market the Southern Calibut utterly fail in making your home a pleas nt, cheerful place. It isn't the end and aim of life to be forever cleaning. I would not have you think that I mean you to be dirty, shiftless housekeepers; that is simply the other extreme. But strike the happy mean between so much attention to dirt and too little. Learn the art of making the plaintiff for $75,000. house look tidy without doing too much work. If you can't do it all yourself, have some of it done for you. But sime ove all things to place where husband and children love to be and where friends delight to gather. It can be clean, too, only not so extremely neat as to forbid the enjoyment of it. I must confess I am out of conceit of the type of woman repre-sented in the Bible, who rises while it is yet dark and gets up her maids and sets wife. They want a companion in their | route. other half as well as a housekeeper, and if you persist in always workfor fear that dust may collect behind the piano, why John will get some one else for his companion. True, there are some women whose duties are so many and whose means are so small that continuous work is almost a necessity. But of such I am not speaking. It is the woman who is always hunting for dirty corners, who is afraid to take a walk for fear a spider may spin a web in some corner and she not be there to sweep it away. I have known women who might have a pretty good time in life, if they were not so dreadfully particular. Just bear in mind that you owe as much duty to yourself, your husband and your children as you do to your house, and you will be able to regulate matters so that each will have a fair portion of your time. Lid yourself of the idea that there is nothing worth living for excepting the broom and pail. Tidy up the house and be ready when your other half comes home to sit down and talk to him, even although you have a dim suspicion that the stove needs blacking. Let the children feel that their home was made for enjoyment, and do not look cross if they litter up the house with toys, or if your hus-band's pipe lies around in all odd corners. Teach them to be orderly and save you as much work as possible, but
