THE NATION'S PAGES.

Characteristics of the Boys Who Wait on Senators and Congressmen.

Some interesting character and peenliar bits of life are found in the pages of the Senate and House of Representatives. In the upper branch of Congress there are about fifteen and in the lower branch about thirty-five pages. Their duties are well-known to the average reader. Their fields of labor are the floors of the two branches of Congress. A page for the Senate, however, never does anything for a member of the House, and vice versa. Sometimes a page is found who is almost of age and nearly full-grown; but they average from nine to fourteen years, and most of them are very small in stature, and upon first appearance boyish in character. As years go on, if they are retained, the little fellows become sagacious, often proud, and not infrequently imitate the statesmen in bearing and conversation. There is no better school for a boy in which to become an actor. He has the best of op-portunity to study every phase of character. Speaking of the pages some-times imitating the acts of their superiors, reminds me of an incident that occurred a few days ago. A very dimensive page who was borne upon the rolls of the last Congress was superseded. When he learned that his place had been given to another he became considerably dejected, for this little fellow had dissipated in a mild way and had been profligate, so that he was found almost without funds, and was Missouri is from Washington. But the injured, three of them fatally. boy had been an observer and knew a trick or two. He studied the situation. He solved it. Going to his boardinghouse he hastily packed up his effects without attracting the attention of anyone. With great caution he removed them to another quarter of the city. Then he went out to bid his confreres adieu. Meeting one of them, who was about ten years old, and as tall as a man's arm is long, he said: "Well, good-bye, old fellow; I'm off.

My constituents have given me the shake. I was defeated in caucus and during the G. A. R. encampment beaten in convention. The situation, however, leaves me a little flat. I am nearly broke; but I have found a way I will jump my board bill. They Sometimes the pages run in schools, like fish, and become clannish. Not infrequently one meets a crowd of them, all under three feet in height, at the midnight hour, making the town howl. Many of them smoke cigarettes and play billiards. There is not a very great proportion of them, however, who fall into these channels of dissipation. Those who do generally come from the larger cities. Then the pages have a way of "bazing," and some of the capers they play upon plebians or inexperienced boys are wonderfully severe and terribly embarrassing. One of the favorite tricks in the line of hazing is to take a new boy down in the lower basement under the hall of the House and show him the "rubber man." The basement is very dark and very broad and cavernous. Portions of it are unlighted, and the unsophisticated youth soon finds himself lost. The sur-roundings are weird and frightful, and and three were drowned. it sometimes takes an hour to get out. month during the session. Those in the House are generally changed every two years, but the boys in the Senate are retained, and some of them grow up to manhood from childhood at their of Maryland. It is said that a considerable number of the pages in the House are blood relatives to members, and sometimes the members have their sons appointed .- Washington Cor. Indianapolis Sentinel.
