A Lot of Frozen Clams

St. Louis Champic m've seen Lawrence Barrett, I s'pose" the fat passenger, "and I s'pose you've of his stuck-up airs and his exclusiveand his refusal to associate with other ers of his company! Well, it is a fact. I at a railway station down in Ohio a a of winters ago, waiting for a train was several hours late. Barrett and ompany were there, too, and it was a me time we had. Waiting for a train little stuck up junction station, with no n in the township, and no nothin' but piled up around the windows and a raph machine ticking lazily of drifts uck trains up the road is anything but y; but when you add to all this the nce of a man like Lawrence Barrett, a n-clam sort of a man, walking about hungry ghost, saying nothing to anyand seeming to see nobody, I tell you you then have all the conditions neces to a feeling of first-class horror. I sat watched Barrett-it was impossible to your eyes off him-and then I began to fraid of myself. Murder was creeping my heart. I wanted to kill that man, our oil over him and set it on fire and him up. And I believe the other were feeling just the same as I was, here's no telling what might have hapif it hadn't been for a little accident occurred just then.

arrett was outside the station, walking ad on the platform. We could see him gh the windows. All of a sudden he d and fell. I guess he had stepped one of the edge of the platform, and we saw take a dive head first into a snowdrift. as a soft, dry snow, and he went down tout of sight. He had his grip strap-about his shoulders, too, and in trying out he floundered about and worked f deeper into the snow.

hat did we do! Not one of us knew We were entirely ignorant of his ce. Every one of us looked as much frozen clam as we knew how, and went the platform and strutted up and seeing nobody and saying nothing, al with ourselves and smiling inwardhat procession of strutters, of cam and elevated noses, walking by that ger floundering in the snow. was about niest thing I ever saw in my travels."

GENERAL WARD.

The Man Whose Successes in China smoothed "Chinese" Gordon's Way,

In this paper I have tried to make no statement which is not susceptible of proof by documents or living witnesses. Such support I have not for the assertion, which I nevertheless believe to be strictly true, that Gordon, who had served his time in the staff with Ward, and greatly admired him, declared, on succeeding him in command, that he had but to follow where the American soldier had led." Whether he said so or not, however, that is what he did. The creator and the first great commander of the ever victorious army was Frederic T. Ward. That he would have taken Nankin and speedily crushed the Taeping rebellion is beyond all question; and he left to Gordon a task far 1889. easier than that which he had himself accomplished.

It is difficult to withhold praise from brave deeds, even if we be not wholly in sympathy with the cause in which they are done. While dwelling upon the striking and dramatic character of Ward's achievements, and having only admiration for the many excellent traits of his character, a conscientious historian must guard himself from approval. actual or implied, of the entry of any right-minded and self-respecting foreigner into the Chinese naval or military service. To this day we maintain the "ex-territorial jurisdiction" in that country, because no one would dream of trusting the lives or liberties of Americans to the mercies of Chinamen, even in time of peace. How much more and Gordon were brave, and in a way great men; but in China they were engaged in a miserable business, and we must like and praise them in spite of this business, not on account of it. They waded to their ends through the blood of thousands of men who had done them no harm, and whom no sentiment of patriotism nor love of liberty impelled them to oppose. They were associated. too, with imperialist authorities and forces, for whose evil deeds they were of course not responsible, but who were sorry allies for honorable men. The story has been told of the cruel murder of the Wongs, or rabel chiefs, who had surrendered to Gordon under his pledge that their lives should be spared, and of his rage and despair thereat. This was must shrink from pursuing the subject. During the late Franco-Chinese war I was more than once pained to hear men who ought to know better talk about seeking service under the dragon flag. This is no place in which to say the very much that might be said as to the wretch edness of such service, and the pirate's fate which they would court, and very probably meet, when encountering a foreign foe: but they might take a lesson from the history of Ward. No one in ten thousand of them could at all anproach him in military genius, in courage and in resources, or do anything like what he did. Yet the rebels took his life, the imperialists took his money and Gordon's biographers took his fame. —A. A. Heyes, in Atlantic.

RETAIL DEALERS' PROFITS.

The Results of a Statistician's Investiga-

It is often stated and generally believed that the prices charged by retail dealers in various lines of trade are excessive. This view is shared by the public, and writers on economics sometimes advance the same opinion, based, as they claim, upon the difference between the wholesale and retail prices paid for goods, such as groceries, meats, dry goods, etc. Some go so far as to affirm that the most grinding monopolies are not the so-called great institutions or systems or corporations, but rather the retailers who make it so expensive to live by their high rates for parious articles of household consump-

However this may be, a statistician has been investigating the subject and calls attention to several points of interest which are set forth in the American Grocer of a recent date. Attention is directed to the value of the service demanded of the retailer, its cosand risk, and a comparison is suggested hetween these and the investment of the time and money of the banker, the manufacturer, the professional man and persons employed in the civil service. It is contended that the gross profits of a retail grucer average the country over not above sixteen per cent., of which eight per cent. is reunited for the cost of the service. This is averred to be particularly true in the larger cities, as shown in the increased cost of supplying rich families over poor ones, involving palatial stores, edueated clerks, calling for orders, delivering goods, a greater variety of the stock of luxuries, etc. And attention is directed to the bulk of the retailers' trade being made up of perishable goods, such as dairy products, eggs, poultry, fish, vegetables, fruits, etc., while the staples are sold at cost or nearly cost, and the profit must come in somewhere else, or on the fruits, spices, fancy groceries and luxuries generally.

It is held that the retailer's capital and labor yield an income much below what is received for a similar investment of time and money in almost any other reputable trade or calling. The statement is made that the sales of a majority of the retail grocers in large cities will not reach $30,000 a year. If his net profit is eight oer cent., based on the cost of the goods. his income would, on that amount of sales, be $2,070, out of which he must live, meet bad debts, keep up and increase his business, etc. It is shown by this shrewd statistician that a dealer who sells $12,000 of goods a year has an income of $828, which is equal to the salary of a chorus girl in an opera company; if he sells $15,000 worth his income is the same as that of a policeman, and if he should do a business of $60,-000 a year he will have a salary equal to that of a French cook .- Chicago Inter-
