ESPECIALLY THOUGHTFUL PROFLE. In common with other thoughtful peo ple, elergymen look with interest upon any method of relieving suffering. But But they are very cautious about giving their names as witnesses to the value of any new candidate for favor in the healing art. They see many people and hear discussions of the merits and demerits of everything asking attention. The testing thus afforded secures them from making the mistake of hasty judgements, and gives to their ut-terances a value which those of few others can have. #### CONSUM T.O. CURABLE AT LVERY STAGE.

In a review of the English translation of a work by the justly celebrated Professor of Medical Pathology to the Faculty of of Medical Pathology to the Faculty of Paris, M. Jaccoud, emitted "Curability of remedies fail. Try it. Consumption," etc., it is announced that "the curability of pulsio, ary consumption at every stage is now a well-established fact." The author's conclusions are cited as follows:

who has them is doomed to death in consequence of their presence. Should it be found that the tubercles soften and a cavern forms, it should not be believed, on this account, that all is lost. It has been shown that this is not the case, and the natural tendency which tubercle has to fibrous transformation—that is, to re-covery—should not be forgotten. Before covery-should not be forgotten. Before being discouraged, the physician should search and examine incessantly whether the patient is in the requisite conditions for such favorable evolution to occur. If all hope of absolute recovery must be abandoned, a relative cure should be wrought, and every exertion be made to place the patient in such conditions that be can lice notivity transitions that he can live, notwithstanding the lesions which are now irreparable; in a word, the plan adopted should be to strive and strive always, with the unshaken confi-dence, which may be drawn from the notion that recovery is possible. The enemy can be conquered. This is the idea that should engender and sustain accessed of the is exerting that this conevery effort. It is certain that this con-viction is the first condition of success, since it is absence of faith in the possibility of a cure which prevents the adoption of all therapeutic treatment. Among the latest additions to the list of remedial agents that of Professor Dujar-din takes the lead for the cure of pulmonary consumption. And this end is attained, not by medicines which aim by themselves to cure, but by so invigorating and strengthening the system as to enable nature to effect this fibreus transformahoarseness and coughing. Alarmed at my condition, I sought a remedy, and was led to try the Compound Oxygen cure. It worked like magic. Within two weeks my hoarseness and sore throat were gone, and by supplying the elements of nerve force sustains and invigorates the whole body. as follows: To sum up what has been stated, pul-monary consumption is curable in all its stages. This is the projific netion that presides over the whole history of the dis-ease, and which should unceasingly in-spire and direct all medical action. The incurability proclaimed by Laennec and his immediate successors is disproved by pathological anatomy and clinical observa-tion. # ONLY HALF ALIVE.

There are hosts of men and women who, to coin a phrase, are only half alive. That is to say, they have seldom if ever any sppetite, are nervous, weak, fidgetty and troubled by num-berless small pains and aches. In the presence of vigorous, exuberant vitality they seem mere pigmes. Such persons are usually fond of frequently dosing themselves, swallowing in the course of the year enough drugs to stock any apothecary's shop of average dimensions. This, of course, defeats instead of furthering the end in view, viz, the recovery of health and vigor. Were they to seek it from an unfailing scource of vitality, Hostetter's Stomach Bit-ters, how different would be their case. Then vigor would return to their debilitated frames, the glow of health to their wan checks, their trembling, uncertain gait would grow firm and clastic, appetite, that grandest of all sauces, would give a relish for the daily food, were it ever so course, and refreshing sleep would crown the tasks of the day. say, they have seldom if ever any sppetite, are
