Things Meant for Making.

In the second volume of Grant's "Personal Memoirs," is recited the following incident of fine courtesy between hostile armies:

As I would be under short-range fire and in an open country I took nobody with me, except, I believe, a bugler who stayed some distance in the rear. I rode from our right around to cut left. When I came to the camp of the picket guard of our side I heard the call, "Turn out the guard for the commanding general." I replied, "Never mind the guard," and they were dismissed and returned to their tents. Just back of these, and about equally distant from the creek, were the guards of the Confederate pickets. The sentinel on their post called out, in like manner, "Turn out the guard for the commanding general," and, I believe, added, Gen. Grant. Their line in a moment front-faced to the north, facing me, and gave a salute, which I returned.

The spirit of this courtesy appears in the history of all great wars. In the desperate fighting that took place before Lord Wellington's victory for the French at Talavera, it is reported, that certain troops, fearfully exhausted by the heat of the summer's day, came suddenly upon a little brook that stole its sinuous way through the valley; by tacit consent firing on both sides in a moment ceased and Saxon and Gaul drank hastily of the sweet water, bathed hurriedly their burning brows, briefly exchanged gay and courteous acknowledgements of each other's splendid valor, and as soon of the last suffering soldier had slacked his thirst and regained his ranks, the dreadful struggle for the mastery began anew more fiercely than before. At the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 20, 1863, fell Gen. Wm. H. Lytle, an eloquent Cincinnati lawyer of fine literary accomplishments, and author of the popular poem, "I am dying, Egypt dying." The story is told that when his body was found by the Confederate and identified among the present at once gave the body an escort of honor, and while the corpse was borne along the chivalric rebel took off his cap reverently and recited "I am dying, Egypt dying," and subsequently said, "Poetry is neither Union nor Confederate; it belongs, like love and courage, to humanity." The high souled Confederate was right. Noble thought has no sex, no clime, no nation; it is as much the pride and property of all as the air we breathe; the sun that is the splendid "Eye of golden day," the rain that mercifully blesses the earth beneath and swells springs under the earth; as the breeze that touches the fevered brow with its cool kiss the world over, and it was in this fine spirit that the English, in spite of their insular exclusiveness, placed the bust of Longfellow in Westminster Abbey; they feel that Longfellow is not English or Yankee, but as the gallant Southern soldier said, belongs to the race to honor, to prize and respect, no matter whether it blooms in England or America. As Pericles, the great Athenian said: "When a great man dies, the world mourns." So England took off its hat to Longfellow, not a great man nor a great poet, but a true poet to mothers and children, of the hearth and the home, and therefore particularly dear to the average Englishman, who, with all his brusqueness, is the most affectionate man in the world, and at the same time the least sentimental.—Oregonian.

A Compliment.

The Wasco Sun, a high-tariff Republican organ, says:
"The citizens of Dalles City can but feel proud that one of their most prominent business men, R. F. Gibbons, and one who has for many years been Clerk of the county, and is now Mayor of the city, should, without any personal seeking, be selected by the Democratic Convention as a candidate for Secretary of State. We do not agree in political policy with Mr. G., but we do believe him an honest able man, every way fitted for such a place, and should he be successful in obtaining the election by the people, we have full faith his filling the position with great dignity and signal ability."

To get a worker for Supreme Judge get a Democrat. Judge Thayer is the only Democrat at present on the Supreme bench of Oregon. The people need another and as Strahan is a Democrat he should be elected. The following will show the work of Justice Waldo and the other justices from the October term of 1884 to November 30, 1885, of the cases reported:
Thayer wrote 49 opinions of the court.
Lord wrote 39 opinions of the court.
Waldo wrote 12 opinions of the court.
It will be seen by this statement that of the cases on which the justices have written opinions, and which were not delivered per curiam,
Thayer wrote about 50 per cent.
Lord wrote 39 per cent.
Waldo wrote 12 per cent.
Give us a Democrat worker.

A Solid Plank.

The Democratic State platform has this resolution:
"That we favor a non-partisan and independent commission, whose duty shall be to count the money in the State treasury as often as may be necessary to insure that it shall remain in its lawful place of depository, instead of being used for private speculation."
Mr. Webb is a very appropriate candidate to stand on this plank. When he was County Treasurer he insisted on his books being examined and the county funds being actually counted every quarter. With him holding the sack there will be no unlawful "private speculation" with the State funds, a practice which has undoubtedly been carried into an alarming extent for years past.—East Oregonian.

A Monopolist, and a Partner of Ben Holladay.

We take the following extract from an editorial in last Monday morning's Oregonian:

"Out of all of the efforts made in Oregon by the selfish railroad policy to boom particular localities, only one permanent town has grown, that of Cornelius, in Washington county, and to this day it is hated even by those who find it to their interest to deal with or through it. Cornelius was laid out midway between Hillsboro and Forest Grove. For years the cars were run past the old towns, and all their citizens who wished to use the road were obliged to trudge to Cornelius. This, in the matter of freight traffic, was a special inconvenience, hardship and loss. Col. Cornelius was one of the parties interested in this business, and it was understood at the time that the arbitrary action of the railroad management in his favor was in return for services rendered by him in the legislature. We are told that he still holds a lease or contract with the railroad giving him special privileges or advantages, which lease or contract has some eighty-seven out of ninety-nine years yet to run. Under this arrangement it is still complained that he is enabled to exact toll upon every pound of freight that comes to or goes from Cornelius. This business of toll-taking, with that of keeping a general country store, forms Col. Cornelius' occupation in life, though in some unaccountable way he is made to pose before the people as a "granger candidate." It was the effort to make a town at Cornelius, to the injury of other places in Washington county and to the oppression of the people that retired Col. Cornelius from public life over a dozen years ago."

Land Piracies.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has called upon the St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad Co. to restore to the public domain an immense tract of land in Nebraska that was wrongfully acquired by it twelve years ago. The Kansas Pacific will also have to release some 900,000 acres and the Union Pacific 1,250,000 acres. These little patches will afford comfortable homes to 20,000 families, who want nothing better than the privilege of redeeming this wilderness. The Commissioner has now in hand nearly 20,000,000 acres wrongfully withheld from the people by the corporations, and but for a Democratic Administration they would never have been able to recover. There is, indeed, strong reasons for believing that successive Republican Secretaries of the Interior and Commissioners of the Land Office are as deep in the mire of persistent piracy of the public domain as the corporations and the land grabbers themselves. But there is now a new order of things and the people are likely to come into their own again.

A Middle Man.

Portland World: Col. Cornelius is a "middle man and not a farmer. He secured a lease from Ben Holladay while he was a member of the legislature, and in consideration of his vote for the $300,000 subsidy steal, for an exclusive warehouse at Cornelius, Washington county, and within three miles of that place. So effectual was his bargain with its railroad managers that the trains refused to stop either at Hillsboro or Forest Grove, and not a bushel of grain can now be shipped from Cornelius unless it pays toll to "Col. Tom."

An ex-member of Congress expresses the opinion that Binger Hermann will exhaust at least half of his salary in telegraphing back to Oregon reports of his "arduous labor" in the interest of his constituents. The elastic strength of the magnetic wire was tested to its utmost capacity when he sent the telegram announcing his proposition to secure an appropriation for the construction of a ship railroad, from the Lower Cascades to Celilo. It may reasonably be expected that his next grand, statesmanlike conception will be the construction of a suspension bridge from Tillamook Rock to Honolulu.—Vindicator.

In 1870 there was a bill before the Oregon legislature to tax the stock of banks. Cornelius voted against it. There was also a bill, that session to tax unnaturalized foreigners. This was one of the many efforts made to prevent the Chinese from coming into the state. Cornelius voted against these bills.

An Illinois editor defines a philanthropist as a zealous person bent on doing the greatest possible good to the greatest possible number with the greatest possible amount of other people's money.

Pennoyer is the man of all men for Governor. Vote for him.
Subsidy Cornelius should be beaten by ten thousand votes.
