The Young Chinese Emperor.

The North China Daily News of July 15th gives the following account of an important decree by the Empress: An edict appears in the Peking Gazette of the 11th inst, to the effect that orders have been given to the Ministers of State to select an auspicious day in the first moon of next Chinese year, for the assumption of the government of the Empire by his Majesty, Kuang Hsu, in person. The decree states that the Emperor is now able to read documents, to understand history and judge between right and wrong. The Empress therefore decrees that the Emperor shall perform the ceremonies of worshipping heaven and earth on the day of the winter solstice this year. The decree states Prince Ch'un and Prince Li, who had been informed of this determination by the Empress, considered that as the Emperor should still continue his studies the Empress might put off his assumption of the throne till the future. The Empress recognizes the sincerity of these representations, but decrees that the Emperor shall assume the reigns of government after the propitious day has been determined on. The decree is dated the 11th inst.

The Shanghai Courier says: According to the Shun pao, the Emperor's throne at San-hai is to have its foundation and pedestal made of gold bricks, and consequently the sub-prefect of Soochow has sent to Peking 3000 pieces of gold bricks for this purpose, under the escort of a weiyuen. The Taotai of Tungchow is now in charge of them, and the wei-yuen has informed the Board of Works of their safe arrival. A deputy will soon be appointed by the board to examine them. We are told that these bricks are of the ordinary size and that they are of solid gold.

William A. Parks, a blind violinist who has been stopping at the New River mines for some time past eking out an existence by playing in the saloons met with the luckiest accident a few days ago that ever befell man. Parks lost his sight when a boy from an aggravated attack of measles and for twenty-three years he has been unable to distinguish day from night. On the 14th of July he strolled from his tent and lost his bearing. In wandering around he fell down the shaft of the Mary Blaine mine, striking the bottom 18 feet below. The most serious of his injuries was a cut extending across the forehead, the skin being torn loose until it hung down over his eyes. The skin was placed in position and stitched by a miner by the name of Rouke, and after the injured man was washed he astonished the miners by stating he could see, and proof, told how many men were around him and told the exact color of a dog that sat ten feet away from the cot he was lying on. On the 16th Parks was able to be around, although feeling quite sore. His sight was stronger, and he was able to detect fine gold in a piece of rock. This is one of the queerest cases on record, and is vouched for by the best men in the camp.—Yreka Union.

Charles Cox, a jeweler of Selma, Oregon, has constructed a steam engine inside the wreath of a one dollar gold piece. Its weight is two pennyweight and six grains, and the length of the stroke is sixteen hundredths of an inch. The length of the valve stroke is three hundredths of an inch, and the machine when run by steam is capable of five thousand revolutions per minute. It is now run by compressed air. The cylinder and bright work is gold plated, and the little thing is quite a curiosity in its way.

Soulogue plantation, in Louisiana, had an exceedingly well colored wedding last week. The plantation is owned by the bride's father, who is a rich member of the Legislature. The groom is also a legislator and a college professor. A special train was run from New Orleans, to carry the guests; the best caterer in the city furnished the refreshments, and beside most of the colored aristocracy of the State, many white people of good social position were present.

Lost Opportunity.

"Was there a man over to see you about buying yer place?" asked an old Dakota settler living near Estelline of his son.
"Yes."
"Eastern spec'lator?"
"Yes; he was from New York."
"That's the best place he could come from. Did you unload him?"
"No."
"Did't, hey? I thought I'd got you learned how to work it! I s'pose you went like a blame' fool and fargot to tell him 'bout striking coal when you dug your cellar! Never said a word consarnin' the indications of gold and silver in the creek or the—"
"Hold on father, I mentioned all these things, and said there was a copper mine over by the cornfield, and all he'd got to do was to bore for natural gas; and still he wouldn't take it."
"Is that so? Glad to know you remembered my teachings my son. We strike 'em that way once in a while, but still you shouldn't 'a' let him get away! you orter invited him to stay to dinner, and then got him out to the barn and into a poker game, and skinned him out of what cash he had and part of his high-priced jew'ry! I tell you, my son, yer dad never had none of the advantages these New York spec'laters had, but he's found an honest man has got to work more'n one scheme ef he makes a living. Ef you'd played a square game on him, and not worked in more'n a couple of extree acres and three or four jacks, you might just as well have lauded him—I've done it several times in my life."—Estelline Bell.

Missionary Work in Iowa.

The train was half way across the State of Iowa and had stopped at a small station. The conductor entered the car and said with a loud voice:
"Here is a telegram from Des Moines, inquiring if any Kentucky men are on this train."
Seven men at once arose in their seats. The conductor counted them and withdrew. When the train reached Des Moines a sedate-looking man boarded the train with a basket containing seven oblong, flat packages, wrapped in a paper, which he sold in about two minutes at fifty cents apiece.
"What are those things?" inquired a passenger of the sedate-looking man.
"Bibles," he replied in a solemn tone, as he opened the door and went out.
The seven men stared straight ahead of them and said nothing. A deep silence fell upon the car.

Franklin's Gallantry.

Dr Franklin was one of the most gallant of men even if he was well advanced in years. I remember to have seen in the Government Library at Paris the original, in bad French, of a note written by him to Mme. Helvetius, wife of the illustrious philosopher: "Mr Franklin never forgets any party where Mme. Helvetius is to be. He even believes that if he were engaged to go to Paradise this morning, he would make application to be permitted to remain on earth until 1:30 o'clock to receive the embrace which she has been pleased to promise him upon meeting at the house of Mr Turgot."

Nellie Grant has been virtually abandoned by her husband Sartoris, and is to return to America. It is the usual sequel to the marriages between American girls and lah de-lah foreigners. Generally however the girls get a title, and the foreigner no account gets a whole lot of swag. In this case Sartoris married for the honor of the alliance, and soon tired of his bargain. According to all accounts he is a worthless, rascally, pot-bellied English dude dissipated to excess, living on the allowance made by his father; with no ambition above a cock fight or a rat pit. Here endeth—not the first lesson.

Joaquin Miller, the poet of the Sierras, has been paying visit to Yreka and other points in Siskiyou county, where he formerly lived when a boy, among the Indians, and says that he is coming back there to live permanently.
