Little Mac Hits Hard.
[N. Y. Star.]
Messrs. Webster & Co., the publishers, have definitely announced that General George B. McClellan's book of personal reminiscences of the civil war will be issued from their press on Dec. 1. The work is entitled:
MCLELLAN'S OWN STORY.
THE WAR FOR THE UNION.
The Soldiers Who Fought It; The Civilians Who Directed It, and his Relation to it And to Them.
BY GEORGE B. MCLELLAN,
Late Major-General Commanding the Armies.
The copyright has been taken out in the name of the General's widow, and the publishers expect that upwards of 100,000 copies will be sold. The introductory chapter of the volume was not found until some time after the author's death. In it General McClellan sums up his reasons for never publicly resenting the criticisms which were heaped upon him in his later years:
"I have thus far abstained from any reply to the various criticisms and misrepresentations of which I have been the subject, and shall probably preserve the same attitude during the remainder of my life. Certainly, up to within a brief period, party feeling has run so high that the pathway for the truth has been well-nigh closed, and too many have preferred to accept blindly whatever was most agreeable to their prejudices, rather than to examine facts. Moreover, during the civil war I never sought rank nor command. Whatever of that nature came to me came by force of circumstances and with no effort of my own. In the performances of the duties thus thrown upon me, I can, with a clear conscience, say that I never thought of myself or of my own interests, but that I steadily pursued the course which commended itself to me as best serving the true interests of my country, and of the gallant troops whom I had the honor to command. I have therefore been able to maintain a calm front under abuse, and, while far from claiming immunity from error—have remained satisfied with the conviction that, after my death at least, my countrymen will recognize the fact that I loyally served my country in its darkest hour, and that others, who during their lifetime have been more favored than myself, would probably have done no better under the circumstances which surrounded me when, twice at least, I saved the capital, once created and once reorganized a great army."

After telling how he entered the service as Major-General of volunteers in Ohio, General McClellan goes on to describe the "apathy of the Washington authorities," the campaign in Western Virginia and his arrival at the capital. The next chapter is devoted to his private letters to his wife, and then follows a dozen pages of anecdotes of Halleck, Scott, Kearney, Hunter, Heintzleman, Sumner, Fitz John Porter, Franklin, Meade, John Sedgwick, Seth Williams, John Reynolds, the Comte de Paris, Klappa, Cluseret and Blenker. Letters and abstracts from letters of President Lincoln and Secretary Cameron follow. The next chapter is probably the most important one in the entire book, and it will doubtless give rise to much acrimonious discussion in civil and military circles. The following summary, which heads the chapter, gives an excellent idea of its contents:
Conspiracy of politicians against the army; the war to be prolonged for political reasons; a half million lives sacrificed; Edwin M. Stanton—his violence against the administration and personal abuse of Mr. Lincoln; Mr. Chase votes a Sunday to bring Mr. Stanton into the Cabinet; Plan of Mr. Chase to place McDowell in command; Remarkable interview at President's house; McClellan declines to recognize orders from Secretary of the Treasury; McClellan's relations with Mr. Lincoln; Anecdotes of the President; His military orders; Reduction of the army after the commencement of the Peninsular campaign.
A description of the battles of Bull Run and Harper's Ferry comes next, and a number of private letters which passed between McClellan and Grant, the tendency of which is to show that Halleck accused Grant of misconduct and then went to Grant and vilified McClellan. Stanton also comes in for his share of abuse, and he is charged with deceiving General McClellan in order to "embroider him with the President." The General then comments on his removal from the chief command, and tells how his advice was disregarded, with disastrous results. He describes Hancock's famous bayonet charge, the Peninsular campaign and the withdrawal of 10,000 men from his command at Fortress Monroe. The following abstracts from the summaries at the heads of the concluding chapters of the work give a fair idea of General McClellan's opinion of his enemies, Stanton and Halleck:

From Chapter xx:
Plan of campaign to operate on James River line; Stanton orders otherwise; McClellan instructed to move toward north of Richmond for junction of McDowell; The order fatal to the campaign.
Chapter xxii:
The church in which Washington was married; McClellan abused for protecting the house; Ill results of not carrying out McClellan's orders about Manassas.
Chapter xxx:
McClellan labors to send forward troops to Pope; Does all kinds of volunteer work for Halleck; The last message to the front; Stanton's insulting order; McClellan asks to be, in battle with his men; No; allowed; Halleck, in despair, begs McClellan to help him.
Chapter xxxii:
McClellan recalled to save the capital; Stanton and Halleck order arsenal stores shipped North; Gunboat ready to take away the Cabinet; McClellan saves the capital; Stormy Cabinet meeting; The President insulted by Mr. Stanton, and Mr. Chase would gladly resign; They say they would rather see the capital lost than McClellan in command.
Chapter xxxiii:
Matlyand invaded; McClellan told he is not to command in the field, Halleck declines his advice about Harper's Ferry; McClellan settles all doubts and assumes command; The halter around his neck; Harper's Ferry lost by Halleck's neglect; McClellan relieves it, but Miles surrenders.
The book is copiously illustrated with diagrams, maps and engravings, and contains a biographical sketch of McClellan by Mr. Prime, who also edits the work.

A Horse to go Over the Gorge.
A great exhibition is to be given at Niagara Falls on Sept. 13, when Adam Forepaugh, the circus man, is to have his rope-walking horse Blondin cross the gorge, either on the brink of the cataract or just below, on a two and a half inch wire cable. The arrangements have been perfected here and the announcement was made Sunday. Blondin is a Morgan colt Adam, Jr., bought near Westchester, Pa., three years ago. He was four years old last Spring. He is fourteen and a half hands high, in compactly built and weighs 800 pounds. Adam began training him at Philadelphia early last Fall to walk the rope.
At first the rope was placed two feet from the ground, but before the circus started out he could do a two and a half inch rope thirty feet long and twenty feet from the ground. He goes backward as well as forward, and has never yet had a fall. He has no fear whatever of falling, and Manager Thomas H. Davis thinks there is not any doubt but that he will walk over the Niagara gorge all right on a still day. He wears a patent rubber shoe, and is very careful and sure footed. "It will be a big card for the show," said Mr. Davis, slowly, "and a still bigger one for the Madison Square Garden next Winter, if he does it. It is easier for a horse to walk a rope than a man, after he knows how, for he has more legs to balance himself with. Animals are not credited with half the intelligence they possess. Blondin is of a mild and tractable disposition. I think he will not be afraid at all, but if he should be, Lestlie, who does the slack wire and turns somersaults with boots and spurs on, will go with him. Cooke is at Niagara now, and as soon as he gets the cable arranged we shall begin advertising for Sept. 13th.

Among the products of Shasta county, Cal., now on exhibition in San Francisco, are growing corn stalks 14 feet high, and an onion that measures 17 1/2 inches in circumference.
