Jesse Applegate.

A few weeks ago the southern train from Roseburg brought to Salem a stout and pleasant-faced man, accompanied by a tall and wiry built man of nearly eighty years. The former had a pleasant smile and kindly voice, while the querulous speech and listless stare of the old man told that his reason had been dethroned, and that this big and good-natured looking fellow was his keeper, on the way from Southern Oregon to the State infirmary for the insane. The Deputy Sheriff was Clay Slocum, of Roseburg, while the poor, demented old wreck at his side was one of the grandest men of Oregon—Jesse Applegate, the "sage of Yoncolla," as he was called in the years that have flown: The brave old man, whose name is part and parcel of the history of "the time that tried men's souls," is among those who are in the condition of living death. He is going the same road that his steady old companion in arms—Gen. J. W. Nesmith—went before. The gates of the asylum have closed behind this brave and true-hearted old prairie giant and we only pray that death may come to his relief as it did to that honest old Yankee who sleeps the long sleep on the green banks of the Rickreal. Jesse Applegate has never been the same man since the defalcation of Sam May, who was Secretary of State under Governor Woods. It made the first direct inroad into what he had saved up, for Jesse was a hospitable man and found the little word "no" a very hard one to pronounce. He lived to see the homestead he had hewn from the pines, sold under a foreclosure and his children turned out upon the roads to get a living as best they could, while strangers sat beside the hearth where his children were born. Who that heard it, will never forget Nesmith's eloquent eulogy on him when he rose at Salem, saying: "As Sergeant of the Oregon volunteers it becomes my duty to call the roll of my brother soldiers—Jesse, why don't you answer to your name, the first and the noblest on the list!" This is no gush of sentiment over two old men, the one dead and the other worse than dead. It is a tribute of love to two old men who are beyond the reach of flattery and one of whom has passed into that august presence before which the voice of praise grows mute and the tongue of malice upbraids in vain. Jesse Applegate was a rude old hero, simple and pure-minded as a boy. We heard him eulogized in Washington eighteen months ago by a Confederate Brigadier, as the grandest man in all the great West. "He was the noblest Roman of all your early pioneers, and my long march to Oregon I will never forget," said General Jones. "It was worth it, just to have shared the friendship of Jesse Applegate."—Tom Merry.

Mrs. Parks, a New Jersey widow of 26 years, has just been married to her step son of the same age. Three years ago the elder Mr. Parks died, leaving an estate of $120,000, to be divided between the young widow and her two children, on this condition, however, that if the widow married again her portion of the estate should fall to the son. So in taking the son as her husband the young widow had to relinquish to him all her share in the estate, yet in relinquishing the estate she obtained the man to whom she forfeited it. This is a clear case of eating your cake and still having it left; and that is saying nothing of the beguile both the husband and the wife have on the mother-in-law question, for the young man has married his mother and the bride is her own daughter-in-law.

Postmaster Barber of Corvallis has announced that a railway mail service is authorized by the postmaster-general on route 44006, which is that from Corvallis to Yaquina City, to begin on September 24, 1886. The Oregon Pacific will then begin the carrying of mail on said route, serving the post-offices of Corvallis, Philomath, Summit, Little Elk, Newton, Toledo, Onasatta and Yaquina City. The change from the buckboard to the cars will be greatly appreciated by the people along the route, and is a change which has been much needed.

Tilden Made a Democrat.

[Albany Argus.]

At one time a well to do farmer came into the executive chamber to see Governor Tilden. He was affably received, told to be seated, and from a talk about crops the conversation gradually drifted into politics. The farmer was very intelligent upon this topic. Governor Tilden quickly saw that he could make his visitor a firm friend.

"Have you any sons?" he asked.

"Yes, four," replied the stranger.

"There is William, Robert, Henry and Charles."

"All Democratic?" queried Mr. Tilden.

"All except William," was the reply.

"Have you a notary public in your village?" asked Mr. Tilden.

"I don't know that we have," was the reply.

After a further conversation the stranger left. In a few days there came to the village postoffice a large official envelope addressed to William—the Republican son. It was opened in the
