Medical Women.

[N. Y. Medical Journal.]
In a recent number of the Petit Mar-cellais, we find an account of a domestic contention between a lady and her husband, which had led to proceedings before one of the courts. The action turns upon the question of a husband's legal right to open and read the letters received by his wife. The husband in this case prays the Court to affirm his right to do so, and the wife asks that he be restrained from taking such a liberty. The points as stated by the parties to the suit show a sort of hand-to-hand conflict previous to contemplate from the domestic point of view, but one that, it is not difficult to imagine, may readily arise between other medical women and their husbands, and one that is therefore of interest to a rapidly increasing section of the profession.

The lady states that it is a matter of every day experience for her to receive written communications from her patients, and that in many instances they are of such a nature that professional secrecy is violated if they are read by her husband, who, she says, consented to her becoming a physician, and should have taken the consequences into account. She could no more think, she adds, of taking him into her confidence in such matters than of allowing him to witness her private examination of patients. The husband replies that he would resign himself if it were only from women that the letters came, but says that she gets them from men also.
She then asks him if she ever agreed to restrict her practice to women.
"No," he mildly answers, "but what about propriety and modesty?" "Everything," the wife retorts, "vanishes in the interest of humanity and science.
I have dissected male as well as female subjects. I am blasé as regards your sex, and I am indifferent to the other.
To me man is nothing more than a subject of observation." "That," says the husband, "I cannot admit. Since you pretend to love me, or to have loved me, it is evident that your studies have made you indifferent. I have reason to believe that you are not incapable of sentiment. I fear that your imagination will get the better of your conscience, and that some new, unknown man will set your heart or nerves quivering at the result of confidence and visits." "You would bid my practicing my profession?" says she. "No," says he, "I would only take part in it with you to a reasonable extent. I ask not to practice medicine, but I must watch over you as I vowed before the civil magistrate. I owe you aid and protection. How can I protect you if I know not the dangers that threaten you? I will tell nobody what I may read, but I insist on reading everything. Since many women write a masculine hand, I can tell the one from the other only by breaking the seal of every missive, and leaving none unexamined."

In his hearing this solicitous husband seems to feel the weakness of his case on general principles, for he seeks to justify his course by citing one of the letters he had opened, the letter in question being one that was not a request for a prescription. It is to be inferred that it was something quite different. But even that does not silence the lady. "Yes," she said, "I have a melancholic patient, one who is disgusted with life and asks me to restore its attractiveness for him. He would love; he is searching after love, and is in despair that he does not meet with it. As his languishing state is connected with hereditary tendencies, and as I think the best way of bringing him back to a wholesome mode of life lies in avoiding abruptness, I do not talk medicine to him in our interviews, and in his letters he answers me with sentiment. Must physicians be accused of leading their patients on to love them, because they honor their illusions before giving them drugs?
Any woman may be faithless, as any man may be victorious; but if I were an actress, an artist, or simply a woman of independent means, unemployed, passing my days alone, I should be quite as much exposed, if not more, as in leading a life that shows me humanity in its miseries and in its injuries.

Trent Items.
Jan. 13, 1887.
A son of Mr. Sam'l Gartin is very ill with lung fever.
Mr. Lee Rutledge spent last Saturday and Sunday at this place.
I. C. Morgan bought several head of cattle here this week for Chas. Lauer, of Eugene.
Misses Bond and Bruce, of Irving, visited at the residence of the Wheeler Bros last week.
Dr. Scarbrough has been in attendance on Mrs. Meador, who, we are sorry to say, is in poor health.
The wife and new son of Hays Mc-Call are getting along nicely, but Hays has not improved as fast as his friends hoped.
Quite a number of hop men are happy, having just received returns from their hop crop which they shipped East last fall.
The exhibition held at Trent school house on the 8th was well attended and seemed to be appreciated by all. The singing, managed by Wm. Bristow, and the instrumental given by Wm. Barr, were excellent.
We are sorry to learn that the exhibition which was given at Trent school house was pronounced an injury by our preacher last Sunday, although he admitted it to be entertaining. We are compelled in justice to those concerned to say that his arguments seemed to be far-fetched and unsubstantiated by the facts in the case.
The people of this district have cause to congratulate themselves on their new school house. It is quite a comfortable change from the old one. Just as they were putting themselves about to raise funds for a new stove, a person outside of the district very generously presented them one just to suit.
He may feel assured he has their gratitude.
UGLY MAN.
When Senator Kenon, of West Virginia, made his first stump canvass he was quite unknown, and, to get a chance at a crowd, followed a popular circus and spode in its tent. His first introduction was by the clown, and it is a model: "Ladies and gentlemen, old and young, without regard to race, color or previous condition, I am about to introduce to you Mister Kenna, the brag young orator and coming statesman of your coming State. He is a self-made man. As a plowboy he plowed corn on these rugged hills, barefooted, bareheaded, and, I say it proud, in his shirt-tail, until he was sixteen years of age. His hands are as horny as leather. He can strike fire from the flint rock with his heel. His well-shaped and intellectual head defies the hottest rays of a July sun. His constitution is as tough as yonder rhinoceros in the cage to the left of the band wagon. His voice is like the African lion's. His eye is piercing as the American eagle's. In his movements he is quick as the mountain fox, and his disposition is as mild as the dying swan's. Hear him, ladies and gentlemen, and remember that the performance is not yet half over."

You would have less correspondence to look over, but you would have more equivocal interviews to break up. It is because I have made myself estimable, by working, by acquiring knowledge, by trying to do good, that I am exposed to the injury of your suspicions. At bottom it is not of my tradition that you are jealous, but of my dignity and importance. If I were a frivolous nonentity I should possess your confidence; being a useful and serious woman, but less easy to deceive, I awaken your distrust. Your are afraid of becoming my inferior, and you are trying tyranny to preserve the balance!"
The connubial tie having been strained to the degree exemplified in this state of antagonism, it may make little difference to the parties to the suit how the court decides, but the decision can scarcely fail to come up in the minds of female practitioners of medicine meditating matrimony or in those of husbands called upon to consent to their wives studying medicine.
