SUNRISE.
The east is blooming! Yes, a rose, Vast as the heavens, soft as a kiss, Sweet as the presence of a woman, is, Rises and reaches, and widens and grows, Large and luminous' up from the sea And out of the sea, as a blossoming tree.
Richer and richer, so higher and higher, Deeper and deeper it takes its hue; Brighter and brighter it reaches through The space of heaven and the place of stars, Till all is rich as a rose can be, And my rose leave fall into billows of fire.
Then beams reach upward as arms from the sea,
Then lances and arrows are aimed at me,
Then lances and spears and stars and bars Are broken and shivered and strewn on the sea;
And, around and about me, tower and spire Start from the billows like tongues of fire.
—Joachim Miller.

A Spanish Bonanza King.

"America does not contain all of the rich self-made men," said Mr. Malloy, a member of the British House of Commons, to a reporter the other day. "Spain, where the class barriers are very strict and the poor man is likely to remain always poor, contains a similar case to your Bonanza Mackay. He is now called the Marquis of Almanzora. Thirty years ago he was a common laborer in a mine, working for 30 cents a day, the average rate of wages paid in Spain for ordinary workmen. Now he has an income of £400,000 a year, $2,000,000. He saved up a little money out of his wages, induced two or three of his companions to join him and they located a mine. Although ignorant, he had good judgment of the value of a mine. Success attended their efforts and after a time the future Marquis bought out his companions. He is one of the richest men in Spain to-day. He bought the title of Marquis to please his wife, and she rewarded him by moving to Paris and trying to spend his income. The Marquis gets little good out of his wealth. He works almost as hard in the mines as he did when his only received 30 cents a day. Near his principal mine is a desert about twenty miles across. It is as dry as a bone, and nothing will grow there except cactus. In the center of this place he has built a magnificent residence. He hasn't a neighbor within ten miles, and the water for the house has to be carried there. He is not happy, I am told, and is painfully economical in his own habits. His chief excitement consists in growling at his wife for spending half of his income, but as his scolding is done at a distance, I presume she doesn't mind."—N. Y. Times.

The President Helps a Man.

The President and Mrs. Cleveland had fairly seated themselves in their pew when a gentleman and lady, strangers, entered and were given the pew directly in front of the President. The stranger kept quiet until Dr. Sunderland opened the sermon, when he arose and made an effort to remove his heavy overcoat. The stranger was evidently nervous in the presence of the Chief Magistrate and his pretty bride and while tugging at his overcoat was securing a good look at the distinguished couple behind him. So abstracted was he that his Prince Albert coat adhered to and came off with his overcoat, and the man stood in the presence of the congregation in his shirt sleeves. The situation was discovered by everybody at the same moment, and a titter ran through the congregation, which gradually developed into a laugh, when the boys near the door took in the scene. The President smiled broadly, while Mrs. Cleveland concealed her grins behind her handkerchief. The minister became so affected that he paused to dilute his smile with a glass of water. It was such a sudden and unusual scene that everybody was convulsed. The stranger's wife hastily sprang to his relief, and they both struggled painfully to skin the overcoat off the undercoat. In this act several failures were made, until the President reached across the pew and held on to one of the sleeves, while the gentleman and lady tugged until the two coats were separated. The stranger quickly put on his under coat, and quietness was restored.

Boston woman suffragists are greatly encouraged. The women who went to the polls to distribute "no license" ballots were politely treated, as a rule the "boys" suspended smoking in their presence.

McDonough county, Ill., seems to be a political curiosity. In 1884 it gave Cleveland 3,078 votes and Blaine the same. This year the vote was a straight tie again, each party getting 2,939.

W. W. Cole's Three Duns.

When Circusman Cole sold his stock in New Orleans recently three dunning horses that he had owned for years went with the others by mistake. Mr. Cole at once bought them back, saying that he would never consent to have the horses become the property of any one who would make them work, and that he had decided to put them to a painless death. He proposed bleeding them to death, but W. B. Leonard, a liveryman, suggested that the use of chloroform would be a better and less painful mode. This was finally decided upon, and a reliable man procured, who was to have performed the operation. They were all collected in the circus tent. There was Cole, Leonard, the riders and the clowns, the ringmaster, the tumblers and leapers, and the three pet duns. Calling the little mare by name he told her to kiss them, all good bye. The intelligent animal stretching forward her head, kissed each one. This was more than they could stand, and the sacrifice was put off. Cole had no place to take them to, so Mr. Leonard promised to find some one who would assume charge of them, under a guarantee never to work them, but to keep them in good order until old age should claim them for the grave.

Election of United States Senators.

It seems as if the election of United States senators directly by the people was now upon us. There is an atmosphere of easy acceptance of the idea everywhere. That two-thirds of the legislatures of all the States will recommend it to Congress is very likely. But will two-thirds of the U. S. Senate concur in submitting such amendment to the legislatures? Will the Millionaire Bosses surrender their machine to the people? There's the rub. It requires two-thirds of each house of Congress to propose amendments. The only other means of amendment is by the legislatures of two-thirds of the States applying to Congress to call a National Convention for proposing amendments, which amendments must then be ratified by the legislatures or by constitutional conventions of three-fourths of the States. It may require a great popular revolution to unseat the Millionaire Bosses, but the rumbling of the popular dissatisfaction over their purchase of that branch of Congress can plainly be heard.—Portland Democrat.

The Portland Telegram says: The next thing we are likely to have in the very near future is street cars running by electricity. Mr. Geo. W. Weidler is now on his way to Chicago where he goes in the personal interest of his great improvement. His principal purpose is to make a careful examination of the practical workings, operations, etc., of the system of propelling street cars by means of the "subtle fluid." Mr. Weidler has devoted some time and thought on this project and he is thoroughly convinced that it is not only feasible, but more economical than the old plan of horse power. It is claimed that the First street line can be operated successfully with electricity at a cost of just one-half what it is now—cars in use on that line can be continued under the improvement. There is also these additional advantages: The speed can be greatly increased and the conductors can remain inside the cars all the time and not be required to go out to collect fares.

Henry W. Grady, the Atlanta editor, who made a brilliant speech at the New England banquet in New York recently, is being put forward by Georgians as a Democratic candidate for Vice President with Cleveland.
