A Large Fruit Farm in Lane County.

EUGENE, Dec. 20, 1886.

Editor Willamette Farmer:

To-day I visited the fruit farm of Dr. Sharples, and to say he has a large one is drawing it very mild, for he has already out and in process of growing, 70 planted acres, as follows: 1,750 trees winter apples; 500 cherry; 3,000 pear; 5,500 prunes; total, 10,750.

The situation is good, being all bottom land, protected on all sides except the west by other big bluffs or heavy belts of timber.

The land is a rich alluvial soil, and invery high water will back up from the river, depositing a heavy coat of the very richest of fertilizing matter on it.
The selection of varieties are of the very best, showing that the Doctor has given the matter much study and forethought, and you have only to converse with him a few minutes to be convinced that his whole soul is enlisted in the enterprise; and the next best feature is that he has got the means to carry out the project, and to push it to a final success.

Like many others, he made one mistake in the commencement, by putting out a large number of peach plums.
While they are a fine plum, still they are not a commercial fruit, and his men are now top-grafting them into silver prunes.

He has a good man, two good teams, a large barn full of feed, plenty of good improved machinery, and is working the ground, and intends to wage a war of extermination with weeds and grass the coming season.

Among other good things is an apple parer, that pares, slices and cores 100 bushels of apples per day. Also a cherry-pitter that will pit ten bushels per hour, and a fruit-dryer that will dry tons per day.

And now we come to a piece of ground where he has had that wonderful stump-puller to work that you have heard me speak so much about, and to tell what I saw—the immense stumps with their great long roots sticking up in the air—well, I am afraid I had better not say anything; but I will risk it just a little, and say that I saw stumps two and a half to three feet through lying all over the ground, that had been pulled out bodily with apparently no trouble at all. But of this stump-puller I will speak again.

W. H. PALLIES.

Big Icebergs.

Admiral Ingleside, a well known English explorer in the Arctic seas has been interviewed by a New York Mail and Express reporter, who put the following question among them:

"You must have seen some big icebergs?"

"I have," was the response, "but the ice I speak of is not such as makes icebergs, though it appears to be a common idea that it is. It is floe ice, made by the sea freezing over, while icebergs are formed by fresh water. In our season the sea will freeze over to a depth of eight to ten feet, and each year it will increase more or less in thickness. I have seen this ice thirty to forty feet thick. I have often seen 100 icebergs floating away at the same time. The glaciers push themselves say two miles out into the sea get over-weighted and break off, having no longer the support of the bottom. I have seen them three miles long and 120 feet out of water, and that would be only one-tenth of them. One of my narrow escapes was on my third expedition, when the false keel of my vessel was cut from stem to stern.
Luckily we were pushed up on the land and so were saved. Just before that I had relieved De Belcher and his crews who had deserted their four ships in the ice and were coming home all crowded into one vessel. That was in 1854.

Liver Without Baron.

Professor (who has been giving simple lessons in physiology)—Where is your heart dear?

Mabel—Here.

Professor—And where is your liver?

Mabel (indignantly)—I haven't any.

Cows have livers.

Professor—Oh, yes, you have.

Mabel (after some thought)—Well, then, where is my bacon?—Life.

Comparatively new counterfeit silver dollars, dated 1882, are in circulation.

They are so nearly perfect as almost to defy detection and any one not an expert would take them without question, and even an expert would be deceived unless he made a critical examination.

They are very nearly up to the standard weight. The milling, on which so many counterfeiters fail, is admirably done. The ring is almost genuine and the general execution good. They are, however, lacking in the rich silver color or appearance, but look like tin in light colored brickdust water.
