Hop Cultivation.

The consumption of hops, though gradually increasing with the growing production of malt liquors, following the increment of population, is practically a fixed quantity. A few thousand tons yield any year above the needs of brewers affects the value of the entire crop of that year, and a crop of 20,000 tons above those needs will reduce values one-half below the normal point; as a shortage of the same number of tons per cent. Owing to the extent to which German hops have been imported into the United States of late, lowering the prices which Pacific coast and New York hop growers would otherwise have obtained, it is of interest to note what Dr. Emil Pott, president of the German Hop-Growers' Association, says in his report for 1886. He states that "the total area of land under hop cultivation throughout the world is about 300,000 acres, of which nearly a fourth are in Bavaria, and the quantity grown last year was 92,340 tons." He estimates the annual consumption amounting to nearly 10,000 tons. This, Dr. Pott thinks, will account for the considerable fall which has occurred in price, and he advises German growers to give up the cultivation of hops upon all ground where the yield is generally poor, and to substitute for it potatoes, carrots and turnips. He also impresses upon hop growers generally the importance of cutting down the expenses. Neither in California, Oregon or Washington Territory is it wise to continue raising hops on any soil or location which is not more than ordinarily adapted for this crop. A light yield or an inferior product, taking an average of years, does not pay the grower as well as other crops which he might have selected, would have done, and yet that little increase in the total product of the world has an injurious effect on the markets of the world. In any year when that total exceeds the demand by only a few thousand tons a light crop of inferior quality loses money for the grower. But on the other hand a good crop of gilt edge in the worst years will yield some profit to the grower. —New York Commercial Paper.

The legislature passed an act reimbursing certain counties for moneys paid by them to the state as taxes due on mortgages assessed in 1883 and 1884. Although these counties paid their portion of the taxes on mortgages, assessed they themselves failed to collect them, on account of the injunction issued from the United States district court. These amounts have been placed to the credit of these counties in the office of the State treasurer: They are as follows: Douglas county, $2271.66; Polk, $2502.55; Marion, $1133.54; Washington, $2577; Clackamas, $1400.43; Benton, $1447.96; Lane, $1473.50; Umatilla, $2421; Linn, 2891.70; Yamhill, $7018.79; Multnomah, $2620.24; Columbia, $139.15; total, $21,987.74.

The last legislature created forty new offices—one for each day of the session. Three were elected by the Legislature, namely, the fish commissioner. The Governor has the appointment of the others viz: A health officer at Gardner, twenty-seven stock inspectors, two railroad commissioners, one clerk for the railroad commission, one circuit judge, four dental commissioners and one clerk for the superintendent of public instruction.

Iron ore is protected by a tariff, yet the iron-ore workers of Pennsylvania earned an average of $4 a week during the year 1885, as shown by the returns of their employers to the State bureau of industrial statistics. Iron is protected by a high tariff, and the workers about the blast furnaces of Pennsylvania only earned $7.39 per week in 1885. If the protective tariff insures higher pay to labor, as is claimed, why do the wages of iron-workers run so low?

The Empress of Japan ordered the court ladies to wear the European costume. They obeyed, but at the first reception found themselves unable to perform the usual salaam to her majesty, for which they were reproved. Investigation showed that, not being skilled in wearing the new dress they had put the bustle on in front.

Tillamook county laments the loss of thirteen bridges across Trask river during a recent freshet. The unanimity with which these bridges were built without regard to the damages sure to result from the fury of mountain stream liable to be swollen into an unruly torrent by melting snows and heavy rains any season, reflects little credit upon the discretion of county officials. After losing two expensive bridges across the Yamhill at Lafayette the county, after a long and costly struggle into it, they at length built a structure above high water mark, to the great satisfaction of taxpayers, who feel at last that they have a bridge. People in other parts of the State are learning, it seems, a like lesson, and it will in due time be a profitable one, though it is very expensive and leads to great inconvenience. The Santiam gave the Narrow Gauge railroad several very costly lessons in the same line, and even yet it has not a sure thing in its bridge across that stream, though reasonably so.

The Salem Statesman, a consistent and reliable Republican paper, thus speaks of the defeat of the bill to erect a monument in honor of Gen. Lane: "This bill should have passed the house. Its defeat does no credit to the fairness or intelligence of that body. The memory of the man deserves more than that at the hands of the State of Oregon. But for his able efforts in Congress this State would yet be a Territory, and knocking for admission along with Dakota, Montana and Washington territories. Dakota has a larger population now than Oregon. Not only was Gen. Lane one of the founders of our State, but he was one of the bravest and ablest of her early settlers. He was the Marion of the Mexican war, and was once a candidate for vice-president of the United States. He was a man of whom every resident in Oregon should feel proud, regardless of party affiliation, and the memory of such men should be perpetuated, for they are not so numerous that it will become a burden upon the people."

Carlton Force, living at Camp creek, in Crook county, has written to his father in the Dalles, says the Times-Mountaineer, stating that the man from whom he had purchased his ranch recently died about twelve miles from Prineville, and on his deathbed confessed having, in company with two others murdered an old lady at Oregon City many years ago for her money. The man led a most miserable existence and appeared to have wasted to a shadow. Death was a welcome relief to him, for he seemed to be haunted by some dread specter. Mr. Force did not give the name of the person who made the confession or the woman killed; but it is thought the latter was Mrs. Hager, who was killed near Oregon City in 1870, and for whose murder a young man is now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary.

The national competitive drill which will continue for a week, beginning on the 20th of May, will no doubt be a splendid military pageant and will doubtless attract many visitors to Washington. Military companies from all parts of the Union that have been drilling for this occasion will then compete for prizes aggregating $50,000. The infantry, cavalry and artillery branches of the service will be represented, and the perfectly level meadow between the White House and the Washington monument will be used as a parade ground.

If no President should be elected in 1888, as is not improbable, and the election should consequently devolve upon the House of Representatives, serious trouble and disaster are almost sure to follow, there being no majority in the House, counted by States. The Democrats have a majority of delegations in eighteen States, and the Republicans in nineteen; while one, New Hampshire, being a tie, will have no vote; yet it will take twenty States to elect. So, if there should be no election by the people, there is likely to be a bigger middle than when Fraud Hayes was counted in, in 1876.
