A Bitter County Fight.

DISNEY.—For some months very bad feelings have existed between the towns of Leoti and Coronadd, two small towns in Wallace county, Kas., over the location of the county seat. The county government is now located at the latter place, and the citizens of the former are attempting to have it moved to their town. Frank Jones, N. Barry, George Watkins, Emmet Berning, Charles Cowler, Bill Rams and a man named Johnson left Leoti in a wagon they noticed suspicious movements among some of the citizens who were standing on the street in front of one of the wagons. Coulter, Rams and Johnson went from their wagons and reached their revolvers. No sooner had they touched the ground than the men in front of the store poured a volley from six shooters upon them, instantly killing Coulter, Rams and Johnson, and wounding Jones, Barry and Watkins so that recovery is impossible. During the fight Deering escaped from town and has not yet been heard from. It is not known whether he was wounded or not. After the killing the dead bodies of the men were left lying on the street, and no one was allowed to remove them until nearly midnight, when the undertaker took charge of the bodies. The wounded men were conveyed to a hospital and are being cared for. None of the murderers have yet been arrested, and it seems that no officer in the county has any desire to attempt the task. The two towns are only a few miles apart, and further trouble anticipated between the citizens.

Steamer Burned.

MOBILE, Ala.—The steamer W. H. Under, the largest boat plying on the Tombigbee river, from Mobile, Ala., to below Gainesville, Ala. This was a total loss, together with a large cargo of cotton. The loss of life was very large, as follows: S. C. Black, J. L. Rembert and two children, W. T. Rembert and three children, Theo. L. Graham, G. Rutes (wounded), John Bryant (steward), Tom Jenkins, Henry Ford, Hayward Nelson, L. J. Lewis, Virgin Jones, and Harris and three unknown persons. Mrs. Rembert was the wife of the captain and part owner of the boat, and was in Mobile. The remaining 106 passengers were living in the upper Tombigbee district. The Gardner was built five years ago for the Tombigbee trade. She was owned by S. Stone, Sid. C. Colman and W. T. Rembert, and valued at $25,000. She was fully insured. The cotton was valued in local companies for $25,000.

Seven boys were walking along a railroad track near Easton, Pa., in a snow storm, they heard a coal train approaching and stepped onto the tracks to avoid it. Just then an engine train thundered along and struck six of the boys and killed them. All of them had their skulls crushed. The engineer says he was unable to see the boys, owing to the blinding snow storm.

The jail at Murfreesboro, Tenn., burned, and three men confined in it were killed in the flames. Fire broke out in the office, from an unknown cause. Jailer Jackson, who was asleep in a room, rushed down and opened the doors. Ten men in upper floor cages were killed, but three men in one of the lower cages could not be reached. They cried piteously for help until the flames reached them.

AMOS' GOOD LUCK.

The Grand Results Following the Finding of a Feather-Bed.

"Talkin' 'bout findin' things," said the man on the nail-peg nearest the door, "I never had no luck that way; twan't in my family. Them things runs in fam'lies, jes' as losin' teeth or hair early, or rheumatiz or blue eyes does. I had a family o' cousins that was dretful lucky that way. 'Peared zif they couldn't g'out 'bout pickin' up sunthin'; an' some times 'twould be with sunthin' and some times 'twouldn't; 'twas 'es' 's it happened, yer know. I've known one of them boys to fetch in a p-noushin in the mornin' and a gold ring afore night. Picked 'em up in the road. They lived on a road 'as was traveled a good deal, yer know. One on 'em found a feather-bed once. He was a young fellow then—twas Amos'—the man paused to look out the door and spit across the sidewalk, 'ho was 'es' married 'n gone 'n 'non-keepin'. They hadn't but one feather-bed, 'n Jane to d Amos 'f they had any company she 'n him 'd have to lay on the lusk bed 'n plumb, 'n let the company have the r. bed, 'cause 'n 'n't a goin' to have it known that I hadn't feather beds enogh to go round," sez Sarah Jane. She was a dretful proud critter," says the old man, with a chuckle. He put his foot across his knee and nursed the upper knee tenderly. "Well, ye see, Amos, he liked a good bed; 'n not to blame neither, fur he was a hard-work 'n feller. Amos was, 'n 'n' sez he, 'n' git another feather bed fore I'll turn out o' n me for company." "Wher 'll ye get it?" sez Sarah Jane. "'Pears to me there's the burnt piece 'n the sparkled heater's got to be used for fore we save any feathers to lay on." Well, Amos, he didn't say n'th'n—'n n't no use when a woman's like Sarah Jane, but he h'te'd up the mare, 'n' off he went ter carry some rolls ter mill. Comin' home he see a barrel right ahead in the road. He p'teked it inter the wagon—'twas headed up, but 'twas awful light—and drove home. When he come into the yard Sarah Jane she come out, 'n' sez she: "What ye got there, your feather-bed?" "Course," sez Amos, just as natural folks was in the habit o' pickin' up feather beds in barrels 'long the road. Well, sir, they o' eened that barrel, 'n' I n't live in this world sixty-eight year come next January, if the 'n' wa'n't a feather bed in it, jest as nice 'n one's e'er ye see, too. Well, it kinder scint 'em both, 'n' Amos sez, sez he: Sarah Jane, what do you think?" She burst out a cryin'. "Sez she: 'Amo, don't let's you 'n me, ever say a sharp word or have a contrary thought of each other agin.' An' I guess they stuck to it. There'dn't never a happier nor a pleasanter-spoken couple live in Lewiston. I don't believe, for forty years, and I call the findin' of that feather bed the best thing Amos ever done in his life." "Some folks is born to luck," said the red-whiskered man, with a s'gh, as he threw a cheese crumb at a mouse that peered out from his hole behind the counter.—Lewiston (Id.) Journal.
