Odd Things in China.

(N. Y. World.)
The highest ambition of a Chinese gentleman is to have a nice coffin and a fine funeral.

They feed their friends sumptuously when dead, but let them take care of themselves the best they could when alive.

Old women instead of young are the ideal belles of society.

The highest recommendation a man can have is the fact of his having a wife.

A bachelor is likened to a counterfeit coin; he is looked upon with suspicion even by members of his own household.

Love-making is only done three days before marriage. It is not only considered the safest way to get ahead of a rival, but the surest way to get a wife without losing much time.

A previous acquaintanceship between the male and female prevents them from marriage. For this reason a man seldom weds a girl of his own town. They are likewise prevented from marrying kins or namesakes. Joneses are not allowed to marry Jones, nor Smiths to marry Smiths.

A girl is never considered anything else in her own father's house than an honored guest. She is neither responsible for the family's debts nor enjoys a share in its fortunes, as is the case of sons.

Daughters depend upon their husbands for fame and fortune, while sons depend upon the parents and upon themselves.

A man could borrow money on the strength of his having a son, but no one would advance him a cent if he had a dozen of daughters. The former is responsible for the debts of his father for three generations. The latter is only responsible for the debts of her own husband.

When a Chinaman meets another he shakes and squeezes his own hands; covers his head. If great friends had not seen each other for a long time, after the mutual hand-shaking they would rub shoulders until they become tired. Instead of asking each other's health they would say: "Have you eaten your rice, where are you going, what is your business when you get there, how old are you, and how much did you pay for your shoes?"

Men wear long petticoats and carry fans, while the women wear short jackets and carry canes.

Boats are drawn by horses, carriages moved by sails.

Old men play balls and fly kites, while children fold their arms and look on.

Schoolmasters have more power over children than parents. If within three years schooling the child is not morally as well as intellectually reformed he is sent into another school.

Parents and spectators instead of the children are held responsible for crimes committed by the latter.

"It is better to be ignorant and know how to live than to be learned and not know how to live. The principal object of a school is to learn how to live in tranquility and happiness and nothing more." So say all Chinese scholars.

It is much less a crime to steal your neighbor's ox than to steal his dog. The former is simply personal property, while the latter takes the place of a man--watchman.

If a Chinaman desires the death of an enemy he goes and hangs himself upon his neighbor's door. It is a sure cure to kill not only that particular enemy, but members of his entire family will be in jeopardy of losing their lives.

When a Chinaman desires a visitor to dine with him he does not ask him to do so, but when he does not wish him to stay he puts the question, "Oh, please stay and dine with me." The visitor will then know he is not wanted.

A rich man's servants gets no salary yet many are the applicants; while big salaries are paid to the servants of the common people, but few make applications. The perquisites of the former is often more than triple the salaries of the latter, are the sole reasons of these differences.

When a Chinaman expects a present and it does not come, he sends one of lesser value.

To encourage honesty and sincerity, confidential clerks and salesmen in all branches of industries receive an annual net per centage of the firm's business besides their regular salaries.

Mr. Spies of Chicago, who for his handiness with dynamite, is confined fast and snug in jail, has a brother on the outside, who acted as a proxy for Mr Spies as a bridegroom. The Clerk of Crook County has returned the alleged marriage certificate to the justice who claimed to have performed the ceremony. The Clerk reminded the justice that as Spies was in the county jail at the time of the alleged marriage he could not have been at the village of Jefferson, where the justice certifies that the marriage occurred.

President Cleveland was fifty years old on the 18th inst.

A Sharp Lesson.

In trials for murder nobody is astonished now-a-days at seeing the jury bring in a verdict of not guilty, derived from a process of reasoning not to be found in any of the known systems of logic. In fact, with ever ready and inventive intelligence the jurors build up a new system every time to fit the case on hand, and with unerring certainty arrive at the desired point of acquittal.

Years ago in the gold mining times of Cariboo, jurors seem to have been more apprentices, though they did pretty well considering circumstances. There was a miner killed in Beaver Lake by a man named Gilchrist, who had dispatched two men in California already. He was sitting at the table when the miner came in, threw down an ounce of gold-dust, bet, and won. The winner bet again with the same result as before, and then asked Gilchrist rather flippantly, if there was any other game he could play better. The gambler took offence at this, raised his pistol and shot the miner dead. The murderer was tried and the jury brought in a verdict of "manslaughter."

Turning to the prisoner Chief Justice Begbis said: "It is not a pleasant duty for me to have to sentence you only to prison for life. Your crime was unmitigated murder. You deserve to be hanged. Had the jury performed their duty, I might now have the painful satisfaction of condemning you to death." And then, addressing the jury, he continued: "You, gentlemen, permit me to say that it would give me great pleasure to see you hanged, every one of you, for bringing in a murderer guilty only of manslaughter."

Dancing or Kissing.

It may be asserted in a general way, that wherever in the U. S. you do not find dancing you find kissing. In communities where dancing was disapproved I have seen "string games" called for and carried into practice at entertainments held in school houses and even at church societies. In such places church members—and, for aught I know, deacons—take part in the amusement; and I have seen it develop a friskiness, so to speak, in grizzled men, which made them one would say, anything but seductive or beguiling to the young and fair. Among those of earlier years kissing becomes in such communities a systematic pursuit, like hunting or fishing. Young girls whose parents object to it or neglected or disliked; a young man in such a village told a friend of mine, with some indignation that she was the only girl in town whom he had not kissed. It is of no use to object to it as immoral where the church members are committed to it. Perhaps it cannot be called immoral; but when society has reached a certain stage of refinement these games vanish. The symbol of that increased refinement is usually dancing. Dancing, whatever its drawbacks, serves practically as an antidote to kissing game; where one begins the other dies out. They do not seem to flourish and side by side; at any rate, people rarely go back from dancing to kissing. Granting, for the sake of argument, that it is necessary to have some amusement, the choice lies, in our villages and their scattered families, between these two forms of relaxation. Which is the better of the two?

Parnell's Faith.

The question of Parnell's religion has often been discussed, but never elucidated. Religion enters so acutely into politics and society over here that a conspicuous man must declare himself. The compulsion which Gladstone invites and Churchill does not repel Parnell has ignored. Ireland is overwhelmingly Catholic. Yet she trusts this man implicitly not to permit any legislation which will be offensive to her traditions. A great critic described the religious state of Germany after the thirty years' war as petrified Protestantism. Parnell is a petrified Protestant. He has never spoken a word which would indicate the presence of a dogma in his conscience. He has never written a line to disavow the hereditary creed of his family. But he has had to encounter so much malignant stupidity on the part of recriminating exponents of faith claiming to be divine that one may credit a story told of him. A lover of Greek lore quoted in his presence one day the ancient trope that Socrates had brought philosophy down from heaven. Parnell smiled his pale smile and replied: "What a pity he did not take theology up there."

The New York Freeman, colored men's organ discovers a hole in a grindstone as readily as any paper in the country: It says: Had Lincoln been able to attend the celebration of his birthday by the Republican Club of New York he would have been astonished by the utter absence of any representative of the 1,500,000 colored Republicans he had made for the party by a stroke of the pen more than twenty years ago. We dare say it was an oversight. We are becoming used to such. They have lost the magnetism of novelty.
