Major Sidney Herbert, editor of the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I have fully tested the virtues of Swift's Specific, both as a rheumatism cure and a tonic. It has done even more than its proprietors claim for it.

Mr. Michael Long, Jr., with the Strohbridge Lithographic Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "I suffered for two years with a terrible itching and painful sores on my neck, arms, hands and fingers. No physician could help me. S. S. S. relieved me perfectly and I feel like a new man.

Mrs. Amanda Lucie, of Gastonia, N. C., writes: "My baby, when four months old, developed scrofula. He had two severe risings and sores on the neck. I sent for our family physician, who pronounced it scrofula, and prescribed S. S. S. for it. I gave the baby S. S. S. and it soon got the disease under control. The sores are healed, and the baby is well and healthy. I know S. S. S. saved his life, and I told our doctor so. He is a regular physician, and prescribed S. S. S. for the baby as soon as he saw it had scrofula.

A Bad Man with a Pistol.

[Grant County News.]

From Ben Erway, who carries the mail between here and Long Creek, we learn of a serious shooting scrape that occurred in the latter burg on Tuesday morning, Jan. 31st, in which P. J. Connolly, editor of the Eagle, better known as "Pete, the Poet," was shot twice by a would-be "bad man," one-shot taking effect in the groin and the other in the arm.

The shootist was Tom Williams, whom the shootee had spoken of in his paper as a "hard rooster," "pistol man," "a slogger," etc., and after shooting the shootee he armed himself with a Winchester rifle and fired several shots at Ed. Allen, who was acting as constable, and endeavoring to arrest him, one shot grazing Allen's foot and killing the horse which he rode. Williams finally gave himself up, and was being closely guarded pending the result of Connolly's wounds.

The trouble grew out of an article published in the paper that morning charging Williams with immoral conduct, which, if true, (and an editor will seldom take the responsibility upon himself to publish an article unless it has some semblance of truth) would ostracize him from the society of respectable people forever. Williams was charged with saying that the women of Long Creek, in general, were no better than prostitutes, and that Long Creek was one great house of ill-fame. Such assertions as these, if not taken up and resented by the husbands, fathers and brothers of the ladies of Long Creek, would show them to be veritable cowards, and Peter gave this fiend-moister in human form—such a "raking down" in his paper that, smarting under the well-deserved chastisement, he demanded "blood," and while Peter was delivering his paper to its subscribers, just because he had dared to voice the sentiments of a portion of the community, he must be attacked in a cowardly manner and shot down like a dog.

STOCKYARDS.—St. Helens Mist: The absence of stockyards at Portland is a serious obstacle to the farmer. A few wholesale butchers with plenty of capital have fixed the price they will pay for beefs, and if the producer will not accept it he may go to Jericho with them, as he cannot sell to retail butchers, because they dare not buy. If the retail butcher buys a few head of beef from the producer direct, the Oregon City Courier, that must have means of knowing, says, he is informed by the wholesale beefing that if he does so again he cannot buy any more from them. As he is financially unable to buy bunches of cattle by the carload in the winter time, when fat cattle are scarce in the Willamette valley, he submits to the tyranny of capital. The beef ring fixes the price the retailer must pay so high that he cannot make over a bare living, even when charging consumers eighteen cents a pound for porterhouse steak and thirteen cents for roast. The citizens of Portland are systematically robbed by the beef monopoly, and as long as there is not a stockyard to compete with it, so long the ring will rob the farmer and rob the eater of meat.

New things in surgery should always get the benefit of newspaper circulation. A switchman at Joliet was run over by an engine and had his right arm crushed above the elbow. The surgeon concluded to try an experiment, and proceeded to remove the amputated bone, which represented about four inches of the original, and bringing the two ends together, fastened them with silver wire, and waited. The bone knit, the crushed muscles healed, and the patient is at work again with a serviceable arm four inches shorter than it was before, but immensely better than none at all. Conservative surgery like this would save many an arm and leg that is now whacked off like it would grow again.

Reminiscences.

A correspondent of the Plaindealer of Feby. 9th gives some facts regarding the early history of Lane county and the reason for the naming of Butte Disappointment on the Middle Fork twenty miles above Eugene, as follows:

In the spring of 1848 a party of Klamath Indians passed down through the Willamette Valley and killed some cattle belonging to settlers that were living in the vicinity of Eugene City, and passed on and made trouble further down, and, on the way back, killed other cattle in the vicinity of Eugene City, and they were followed by Elijah Bristow and Elias Briggs of Pleasant Hill, and Cornelius Hills of the Middle Fork. The above party followed the Indians as far as Fall creek, and finding the creek very full and rapid and the brush very thick, and being only three of them and knowing there were twenty-four Indians they deemed it imprudent to attempt to cross and so turned back. In the meantime, Eugene F. Skinner, Benjamin Davis and Henry Noble went down to the settlements on Long Tom and Muddy and raised a number of men and picked up what could be spared from home on their way up, so that when we got together at Mr. Hills' residence on the Middle Fork there were seventeen of us, the writer being among the number. We took the Indian trail and followed it to and across Fall creek and up the river some miles above. It being the month of April, and the sun shining very bright and warm, the snow was melting very fast, and when we got to where the Indians had crossed the river some days in advance, we found it too high to ford, and so were compelled to turn back. We supposed at that time, the Indians could not get through the mountains, on account of the snow and we could hem them in. On our way back we were riding leisurely along and got pretty well up the side of a very prominent butte or mountain and some one proposed that we go to the top and take a view of the surrounding country, which we did. When we got to the top it was getting pretty well along toward evening and grass and water being abundant the proposition was made that we camp there for the night which we did. The next morning the sun came up as bright and clear as it is wont to do, in clear weather in the spring in Oregon, and unfolded a lovely scene. Not a thing to mar the beauties of nature; just mist enough on the river to make every other object in view more bright; and some one of the company, I do not remember who, proposed that said butte be named, and a vote of the company agreed to leave the naming of it to Mr. E. Bristow he being the oldest man in the company. Mr. Bristow said that he and two others had been disappointed a few days previous near the foot of it, and that we had been disappointed again a few miles above it, he would call it "Butte Disappointment," and that is the way said butte came by its name. In the company were E. Bristow, Aaron Richardson, his son, and son-in-law, Rowland Hinton, a Mr. Reeves, Henry Noble, John Aiken, Benjamin Davis, Lewis Coryell, Cornelius Hills and Thos. Smith. I do not remember now who the others were.

How Air Brakes are Used.

"I'll bet not one in a hundred of the people who travel on railroad trains understand how the pressure of air is used to apply the brakes to a train," said a railroad man.

"When the air brake was first invented the air was turned into the cylinder under each car when the car was to be stopped, and the pressure was exerted to force the brakes up against the wheels. But at the present day the brakes are held against the wheels by springs, and the air is turned into the cylinders to push the brakes away from the wheels as long as the train is in motion. When it is desired to stop the train, the air is let out, and then the springs apply the breaks and stop the train. This last method of using the air pressure has great advantages over the old way on the score of safety. Whenever an accident happens to a train, one of the first effects it is apt to have is to rupture the air pipes leading from the engine to the cylinder under the cars; and that of itself stops the train instantly. It is very important for everybody to understand that this matter, because a
