INSURING WINDOWS. Companies Called Into Life by the Meanness of Human Nature.

Kicking out a valuable pane of plate-glass to spite the owner of the premises is about as honorable a way to take revenge as whipping the little sister of a big boy who has "licked" you. And yet instances are of almost daily occurrence. Frequent breakage through cussedness, carelessness or accident many years ago suggested the organization of insurance companies to take exclusively this class of risks. England was their birthplace, and they emigrated to this country about fifteen years ago. There are now three companies doing business in this line in Chicago. None of these will touch fire risks, but all insure against any kind of loss which fire policies do not cover. Their plan is to take the importers' lists of prices, deduct 25 per cent. and charge 3 per cent. per annum on the remainder. When there is a loss they pay no money, but replace the broken glass at their own expense. On panes that are worth $500 or more they charge 5 per cent gross, taking nothing off, because they are much more liable to breakage.

The charge on mirrors is from 3 to 10 per cent., according to size. The risks are considered extra hazardous because they are largely in saloons. In case of breakage they are replaced. This plan gives better satisfaction to both parties. In this city policies are outstanding to the extent of more than $1,500,000, but it is estimated that not more than one-fourth of the mirrors and plate glass are insured. The companies have an arrangement with the glass dealers and importers by which they get glass at a low figure; but even with this advantage they could not exist but for the salvage. A mirror worth, say, $200 may have a corner broken. It can be cut down in size and reframed at a loss of not more than 25 per cent., and becomes the property of the insuring company. A fair estimate of the yearly losses in Chicago places them at 1,000, a majority being the result of pure meanness--Chicago Tribune.
