Horses and Other Stock.

A year ago the interest in most of the states in horse breeding had begun, and greater still during the year, resulting in an enlargement of numbers and enhancement of the aggregate value.

No class of domestic animals increased in such proportion within the year. The advance averages 5 per cent, distributed more largely through the western states, and is quite marked on the Pacific Coast, a natural result of the rapid increase of population there, and development of industrial enterprises generally.

Many are giving up sleep in favor of horses, and the tendency is toward the States for larger horses more suitable for draft purpose, Clydes and French breeds predominate in the improvement. In 1879 the average value of horses was $52.41 per head; and the average at the present time is nearly $73, an increase of $20.59 per head, which makes the value of all the horses within the United States and territories amount to $946,096,563, showing that the prices are now relatively high, and furnishing a solid reason for the increase in numbers, showing that the raising of horses pays the stock grower better than any other class of animals.

The improvement also in quality by better blood and especially the increase of weight by the distribution of the Scotch Clyde, English Shire horse and French draft horse. The decline in cattle is 10 per cent, within the last year, a further decline in the number of sheep is 4 per cent, the average value $2 per head. There has been an average advance in the value of swine of all ages from $1.45 to $4.98. Notwithstanding the ravages of disease in the several states which has been very severe, the stock interests of the United States are at present in a comparatively prosperous condition with a prospect of an advance in prices at an early period, if no monetary crisis or business convulsion should intervene, of which there are no indications at present. An interest that represents $2,400,000,000 including horses and other animals in cities not far from $3,000,000 is one of the very first agricultural importance, that demands the most intelligent endeavor of farmers to obtain the largest possible annual income from such an investment.
