He is the American apostle of pessimism.

In the April Lippincott Mr. Saltus utters his views. He declares a suicide is an optimist, because he tries to abolish

The pessimist, on the contrary, is the most contented of men, because he is glad things cannot get any worse, being as bad as they can be now. America will eventually become leader of the Anglo-Saxon race, and will displace England from the position she now holds. Many eyes in this part of the world are already being turned toward America as the power that is likely to preserve the interests of the Anglo-Saxon race in the Pacific, without herself annexing anything or allowing foreigners to do so It is clear that the enter of power among the Anglo-Sazon race is shifting to America, as the center of population has already done. It is therefore unwise of Eng. land to neglect her interests in such a time of The United States does not require a standing army and consequently the whole sources of the people so circumstanced could be devoted solely to the maintenance of a navy which would make the Anglo-Saxou race also lute masters of the world.

Some years ago a writer whose name, unfortunately, we can not recall, published a thoughtful article, fully illustrated, on that old and vexatious question of how to keep the boys on the farm. We do not now recall much of this able paper except the pictures, of which there were several. One of these represented the boy whom it was thought desirable to keep on the farm band was always glad when she corconfined in a borgiar proof room, with heavy bars on the windows, etc.

The author argued that there was nothing better to keep a boy away from the temptations and snares of city life than this. Another showed around his body and the other end recommended for making boys feel attached to the farm. Still another represented the boy placed in easy reclining position, and a considerable pile of bricks heaped on his legs. The writer clearly demonstrated that there was nothing which had a greater tendency to make a boy cling to the old iomestead.

We know not but this author may have written partly in a spirit of tevity; certainly some of his plans are novel, and we never heard that any of them were ever put into actual use. We do not consider them practical. however beautiful they may be in theory, and if not adapted to the successful keeping of a boy on the farm how much less use would they or any thing of even a remotely similar nature be in restraining an impetuous young lady bent on flying with a young man to some accommodating and eaterprising justice of the peace. The notorious failure of stone walls and iron bars to make either a p ison or a cage was sung of long and, and nowhere will their inadequacy be more noticeable than when they are employed in an attemp, to restrain a girl from eloping when her heart is set on it.

The best and only sure way to prevent the elopement and frequently break off the match entirely is, we believe, to watch carefully, and when the young man appears to carry off his romantic bride, whether he comes on a white palfrey and puts up a ladder to her window, as he shou'd do, or only jumps off a street-car and meets her in a candy store-at this stare of the proceedings, we say, let the farme put in an appearance and produce a minister, either from within the shadow of the porch or from the rear of the confectionery establishment and tarry a moment while the good man makes them one.

This will break up the elopement and in a great many instances prevent the marriage entirely, and the misguided young folks will frequently conclude they do not wish to be married as badly as they imagined. This plan pretty effectually kills of the romance. There is nothing romantic, we suppose, about standing up in the middle of a candy store and getting married, while the sales adies titter and chew gum and customers drop in and wink at one another. Let the fathers of the counsey try this plan on their eloping

WOMEN IN BATTLE.

French Ladies Who Have Been Decorated

Truth is stranger than fiction, and when next you hear or read an impossible story, instead of exclaiming, like a well-known authoress to the narrator at a London dinner party, "Go it. Ananias," you had better quietly observe, "I suppose it's true." Anyhow, we are apt to scout the stories of women who have concealed their sex the better to perform doughty deeds of va'or, and lo! here are F each statistics, with their dry facts, coming to prove that what nove ists and poets have written has not been evolved rom their inner consciousness, but rom the romance of history. Thirtyour French women have been deco ated with the Legion of Honor since the order was instituted, and of these even distinguished themselves on the attle-field. Two women so diers were ecorated under the first empire, one naving dressed as a man to replace er delicate brother, her sex only beng discovered when she was wounded. fter attaining the rank of sergeant. The second heroise took to fighting secause she liked it, and distinguished perself at Yemmaper, Austerlitz and lena. Save for one brave vivandiere. he e was a blank from 1815 to 1851, and hen came more military women, whose xploits would read like an after-diaer story. Whether these women vere or we'e not unsexed by thus chandoning their proper sphere is not he point at all; the fact remains that vomen have military qualities capable of efficient training should need arise; nd in a country where the perils of war, the lack of an army and the volnteer question are being debated, it is ist as well to recognize the fact that National questions are at stake it beomes perfectly possible to double the clusteers of the army by including oth sexes. - Sydney (N.
