Give Them a Chance!

That is to say, your lungs: Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them. When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, asthma, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Roscoe's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for relief.

What is It!

That produces that beautifully soft complexion and leaves no traces of its application or injurious effects? The answer, Winslow's Soap, accomplishes all this, and is recommended by thousands of ladies and gentlemen to be the most delightful toilet article ever produced. Warranted harmless and matchless. F. M. Wilkins, agent, Eugene City.

Broken Down Office-Seekers.

Among the many office-seekers who haunt the hotels and the White House, I noticed one who was once worth a million dollars. Another one sat in the Senate of the United States and was talked of for the presidency. A third gave up a lucrative law practice in a western state some six or seven years ago to enter politics. He carried his district to Congress and was twice re-elected. To maintain himself politically in his district, and to cut the social figure which he and his family thought indispensable here in the capital, he spent while in Congress, over and above his salary, the sum of $45,000, or all he had in the world. He is now without office or income and an aspirant for a $2,500 job, with no certainty of getting it. Ex-Congressman of Iowa, a man who once had as bright prospects as any public man in this state, is another type of the political unfortunate. In the pursuit of a fortune he sacrificed a comfortable fortune, and is now a small farmer, with a mortgage on his place, and a cattle ste for post-ster in a town where the salary is but little more than $1,000 a year. Ex-Senator Spencer of North Carolina is now a clerk in the interior department. Of the men now in Washington, looking for employment in the public service, fully one-half are ex-officers of Congress—judges, congressmen, senators or foreign ministers.—Washington Letter to Philadelphia News.

There has just been collected from the United States government on the Indian war claims of Oregon, $28,122 98. This amount is practically in full for all claims forwarded. There are small claims yet remaining but these will also be forwarded when the proper vouchers are received. To illustrate the wonderful amount of official business that had to be transacted in relation to this matter, it may be stated that, during the year 1888, 100,000 pounds of office papers and documents bearing on these claims were forwarded from the state department to Washington.

DAMAGE SUIT—Wm. F. C. South has filed a suit in circuit court against Dr. Courtney of Lebanon, for $5,000 damages for malpractice. Mr. South some months ago had his leg broken accidentally and Dr. Courtney attended him. Mr. South alleged malpractice and that the professional service was badly done.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustrous and pleasing tint, and adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted moustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmitt, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

Funeral Oration.

The following is the funeral address delivered at the grave of Geo. S. Washburne by A. C. Woodcock:

Kind friends, I shall now endeavor to fulfill the last request in reference to himself that our departed friend most coveted.

Brother George S. Washburne, the kind son, brother, husband, father, friend, died while the dew of life's morning was fresh on his brow, scarcely molested by the heat of the meridian sun of life.

Just as he had gained eminence in his profession; had commenced to reap the benefits of energy and industry; had been crowned with honor in public life; he was forced to surrender life's struggles and quit the busy scenes. It may be well while ambition is at its fullest height, before disappointments come, while one is praised on every side by admiring friends, while hope like a queen reigns supreme in the mind to succumb to the inevitable summons of death.

Our departed friend graduated at the University of Oregon in the first class that was graduated from that institution. He read law with Mr. G. B. Dorris, of Eugene City, and was admitted to practice in the year 1879. He commenced the practice of the law in Junction City, but soon after moved to Eugene and continued to practice law there until his failing health compelled him to quit. My intimate acquaintance with him began when I commenced reading law in his office and under his supervision as my preceptor.

Soon after my admission to the bar, we formed a law partnership which lasted until impending death forced its dissolution. In all my intimate relations with him in business, he maintained that same genial, kind and generous disposition which characterized his whole life.

He had achieved a success in his profession that many of pronounced ability never acquire, even at a much younger age. He filled with success the office of county judge of his native county for the term of four years. He was a leading lawyer at the bar in his own county, and one among the leaders of the bar in this state.

His skill and tact in court as a trial lawyer was admitted by all attorneys who came in contact with him in the trial of a cause. No one appreciated the keenness of his intellect and the ingenuity of his interrogatories more than the willing witness who had to be subjected to a cross-examination at his hands. He was wholly devoted to his clients' interests, serving them with undaunted courage when a difficult case was placed in his hands. During my experience of two years and over with him as a law partner, I never knew him to turn one away from his office on account of his poverty or inability to pay for legal assistance. To other members of the bar he was kind and courteous. To his friends at large he was generous to a fault. He had a quality in his disposition of drawing men toward him. I think it can be safely said that no one ever departed life in his country leaving behind a greater number of intimate friends than he did. He had a brilliant future before him, and if he had lived, the best gifts in the hands of the people of this state would have been in his reach. Man's humanity to man was his religion. And his charity ended only when his ability to give ended. He lived for the benefit of all, but believed that all beyond this life is a hidden mystery, and that no one is certain as to the future. But if any man leaves behind a greater number of intimate friends than he did, he is to be congratulated. He is to be congratulated for the good he has done, and for the good he has done for those who have gone before. I cannot believe that if there is a future existence that it is marred by the separation of friends and kindred. I believe that such a generous soul as inhabited this poor tenement now before us, can be refused any of the favors that may be bestowed upon a human soul hereafter. If the author of all creation should see before us which we know we are, and that the most perfect laws has prepared a place for the human family hereafter, it, too, must be governed by perfect laws based upon perfect justice. True love is everlasting, and I cannot believe that the author of our being can have other than true love for us all. It has been a noted fact in the lives of great and noble men that their most death bravely. A noble soul dies a noble death. While our dear friend was surrounded by those most dear to him, and when they thought he was dying, he suddenly rallied, and as if by inspiration, uttered sentiments showing that he was happy in death, some of which are as follows: "This is glorious; I am so happy and contented; under what more pleasant circumstances could I die with all my beloved ones around my bedside." "What grander meeting could there be! A picture that could not be painted on canvas. We have been a harmonious family in all relations with one another." And then after talking individually to his parents, and to his brothers and sisters present, and expressing the deepest regret that the absent ones were not present, and after talking to each of his little boys, he placed his hands on the head of his devoted wife and said: "And my dear darling wife, you are tried and true, faithful to the last. I know you would have given your life as a sacrifice for your loved ones." And now, oh, kind and departed friend, if thou couldst but know to-day how many hearts have been made sad by thy departure, how many tears of regret have been shed as they lay low, how many hearts have been made happy by thy kind and generous deeds, thou wouldst surely be led to exclaim, the world is better that I have lived. We leave you to your last resting place.

"Yet not to think of happy and contented; under what more pleasant circumstances could I die with all my beloved ones around my bedside." "What grander meeting could there be! A picture that could not be painted on canvas. We have been a harmonious family in all relations with one another." ### Coal Mines.

COMSTOCK, Or., June 10, '89.

EDWIN GRANT—Enclosed by mail please find packages of coal taken from shaft situated 1/2 of a mile northwest of Comstock station, and about 1,000 feet from the line of the S. P. R. R. The specimen is from the bottom of the shaft which is not yet through the vein, which is now fact up 58 inches perpendicular. Of this 38 inches is solid, and will require blasting. The upper 20 inches is more strictly stratified, the strata constantly thickening as the tunnel advances. We are opening up another mine 1 1/2 miles from the track that is a much larger vein, equally as fine coal, which now presents a face of 100 inches. The route selected for a tramway to the main road from this mine will be down the valley of Ward creek, flowing into Pass creek 1/2 mile south of this station. I have spent some three months here in the mines and have given them a thorough examination. I find very satisfactory indications of an extensive coal field, granite, sand stone, limestone, slate and gneiss, the clay. It is a very rich and good, and of the finest quality of sandstone to be north and east. This fact has heretofore very much retarded the development of the mines, as parties engaged in prospecting always took an "upward drainage." The coal would soon run out, or, if they followed the "pitch," water soon accumulated, and the prospect was abandoned. I started a tunnel northeast and when water followed put in a wing dam. Finding the coal not increasing as the tunnel advanced, I dug a shaft through the bottom of the tunnel. This soon brought the true vein into view, and now no one who has visited the mine can doubt the existence of a reliable first-class coal mine. Our tunnel was run in 15 or 20 feet some years since and was abandoned. I dropped back down the mountain 150 feet, following the "dip" forward. The true vein was found to be 18 feet below the bottom of the old tunnel, showing 100 inches of good, reliable hard coal. There are also other veins of wealth to be found here, not the least, a remarkably healthy climate, pure water, sheltered from the wind, the subtle, aromatic medicated influence of the air breathed from among these everlasting fir clad mountains proves a healing balsam to all afflictions of the throat and lungs that are within the range of possible relief. Limestone of a superior quality for building and lime granite, fire clay, limestone, slate, and fine bodies of timber. Fruit of all kinds would certainly succeed here. All these lands are of remarkable richness of soil, and every-thing for sale can reach the market by way of the railroad. Jos. W. MANOX, M. D.

Money in Elections.

The Boston Herald has elicited the opinion of a number of men prominent in public life or in business, as to the dangers from and the proper restrictions upon the use of money in influencing elections.

Three ex-Governors of Massachusetts head the list. Ex-Governor Gaston believes that "the improper and corrupt use of money has degraded our elections, that it tends to Pineroxy and is one of the sources of danger to our institutions." Ex-Governor Long considers that "it is not desirable that corporations should take any active interest in the success of special candidates," but sees "no impropriety in their disseminating in every proper way, by literature or through the press or by speakers on the platform, information which they believe will promote a political policy for the general welfare." Ex-Governor Butler boldly declares that "corporations have as much right to protect their interests by sending men to represent them in Congress as is possessed by any other body of men." None of the men interviewed defended the purchase of votes, though several of the politicians justly assign funds that could be desired or used for no other purpose.

Mr. Long's supposition that a corporation will spend money to "promote the general welfare" is well met by the affirmation of Ex-Mayor Martin that "whatever a corporation does is in its own interest." When corporations or rich men as individuals contribute money to elect Presidents or members of Congress they do it, as Gen. Butler says—and he has "been there"—to "represent them and protect their interests." And when an election is carried by money or the Government is interested in the interest of the money power the result is, as Ex-Gov. Gaston very properly observes, "a Plutocracy—an oligarchy of wealth instead of a Republic of equal citizens."

The remedies suggested in the various interviews are more general than specific. It is plain, however, that two measures will do a great deal to check the result, as Ex-Gov. Long says:—

1. A law limiting campaign expenditures by candidates and committees and requiring publicity to all disbursements.
2. A ballot reform which shall provide ballots at public expense and secure privacy and secrecy in voting.

Willing to Pay for His Honors.

"Did you give that man money?" was asked of a citizen who had just parted with a man who walked with a limp.

"Yes—a quarter."

"He's a chronic beggar."

"You should discourage such characters."

"Yes, I know; but when a man comes up to you and calls you Colonel and says he was right behind you when you charged that battery at Antietam, how can you go back on him?"

"But you were not at Antietam."

"No."

"You were not a Colonel?"

"No."

"You didn't even enlist in the late war?"

"No, and do you suppose I'm going to own it up for the sake of a quarter? Not much! I've got a half a dollar for the first man that calls me General.—Free Press.
