CITY AND COUNTY.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK.

Fair Weather and a Pleasant Time—Interesting Exercises.

The Commencement exercises of the University of Oregon for 1889 have passed and gone. The graduates go forth to take their station in life's work, and the students return to their homes for needed vacation. It can be said that the exercises for the week have been fully as interesting, and as well attended as those of any previous year.

Villard Hall, where the exercises were held was tastefully decorated with festoons of evergreens and flowers, and moss covered the front of the stage.

Sunday, June 16th.

The Baccalaureate sermon Sunday was delivered by Rev A. J. Brown of Portland, the text being the last clause of 4:14 of the book of Esther. The reverend gentleman held his audience closely by his force of reasoning and analytical powers, making application of the text to the present times

Monday, June 17th.

Monday evening at 8 o'clock, the public recital of Miss Mary McCornack's music class was held The class showed by the exercises that their musical education had been carefully directed by Miss McCornack and she must be congratulated on the proficiency shown by her pupils. Several encores were proffered the students during the exercises.

Tuesday, June 18th.

The Laurean and Eutaxian literary societies held their customary reunion Tuesday evening, the exercises consisting of music by the orchestra, vocal music, recitations, a poem, and the annals of the societies in which many of the members received personal attention. The exercises were interesting and were frequently applauded by the audience.

Wednesday, June 18th.

The address before the literary societies at 10 a. m. was delivered by B. B. Beekman, L. L. B., of Jacksonville. The subject chosen was "Social Dynamics," and was ably presented. Mr. Beekman fully sustained his reputation as a clear and logical reasoner. The address equalled if it did not excel any heretofore delivered in the University halls. A synopsis would not do Mr. Beekman justice and our limited space will not permit its publication entire.

The class tree exercises were held at 3 p. m. The oration was delivered by by Emma C. Dorris, and was timely and appropriate. The class tree poem, written by John L. Tait was read in an excellent manner by Ada Sharples. The tree was a Lawson cypress.

CLASS POEM—1889.

Who shall lift aside the curtain that conceals the coming years?
Who shall tells us half their riches, smiles and bitter tears?
Only God, who knoweth all things, may foretell what these shall bring.
Only Time, His grey beard herald shall proclaim it for his king
Only Time of changeful visage Time of mingled hopes and fears,
Tempered like a happy school girl, smiling still amid her tears.

Let the seasons bring their changes as years go rolling past,
What shall any man be counted (but a cipher) at the last?
Here upon a narrow island, overdriven with the spray,
In a sea of Past and Future—on that island called To-day,
Here we labor for an instant, then all men alike are cast,
There beneath the turgid waters of the billow bounded past.

All in vain the sculptured marble, Affluence, rears unto her own,
Time who laughs them all to scorn, is cheated by no chiselled stone.
Vainly Favor to her pampered cuts the deep lined paragraphs,
Time with unbribed hand erases e'en the lying epitaph.
Only in their deed live heroes, everything everything shall pass away
Save the names those deeds have chiselled on the sea girt rocks "To-day."

Nor shall curtained hours only recompense the careless soul,
Blind Oblivion is only one small fraction of the whole.
Opportunity neglected, leaves upon the soul a blight,
Phantom voices wierdly crying unsung anthems in the night.
Spectre forms that shall arise, and ghostly hands that shall accuse
Him who dares neglect, as well, as him that boldly dares abuse.

"Palman qui meruit ferat" reads the Law, Divinely framed,
Only who has fought and conqueored may with conquerers be named.
Only who has fought and suffered shall receive the healing balm,
Only who has deserved it shall be crowned with living palm.
"Palman qui meruit ferat," Time has thrown his gauntlet down,
I will crown that mortal only who is worthy of a crown.

Here we rear no classic column to the memory of the past,
Ours is still the word unspoken, ours is yet a die uncast.
Here we plant the living emblem of the promise of our youth,
Steady growth through coming years with firmer grasp of grander Truth.
Happy if nutimely tempests wreak no fury on that growth,
Happy if no branches wither with the wasting blight of Sloth.

"Palman qui meruit ferat." Like some grand cathedral psalm,
Comes the comfort of the promise, "Who deserves shall bear the palm."
Not alone whose work is rounded with the fullness of success;
He who fails may fail so nobly his desert is nothing less.
He deserves who does his utmost toward accomplishing his best,
"Palman ferat;" to his God he safely may leave all rest.

The Alumni meeting was held at 3 p. m. A piano solo was rendered by Miss Alberta Shelton. Rev. O. B. Whitmore delivered a prayer. C. S Williams, President of the Alumni, made his address, which was replete with gems of thought and was well received. A vocal solo, "Ave Maria," was rendered by Loulu Sawyers. Miss Lura Murch, of the class of '87, read an essay entitled "Unity of Thought." Misses Alice and Kate Dorris and Messrs. Collier and Hill sang a quartette, "Twilight on the Sea." Geo. W Hill, of the class of '84, took as a subject for an oration, "The Materialism of American Life," the speaker evidently having given much thought and study to the subject. "Be True," a vocal solo, was rendered by Miss Dora Scott. The poem, entitled "The Last Man," was written by Joel Pearcy, of the class of '79, and was read by Mrs. C. M. Hill. A male quartette, "With the Tide," by Messrs. Collier, Woodworth, McAlister and McClure, ended the meeting.

A business meeting of the Alumni was then held and officers elected as follows:

President—S. W. Condon, class '82.

Vice Presidents—Alice Dorris, class '82; Bertie Shaw Humphrey, class '84.

Secretary and Treasurer—Emma C. Dorris, class '89.

Orator—R S. Bean, class '78; alternate, Wallace Mount, class '83.

Essayist—Ida Patterson, class '86; alternate, Minnie Starr, class '80.

Poet—J. W. Goltra, class '83; alternate, Etta E. Moore, class '88.

In the evening Rev. G. M. Irwin, of Union, delivered the address before the University. The gentleman made an excellent address, closely engaging the attention of his auditors. His subject was, "Man as a Ruler."

Commencement Day, Thursday, June 20

Carriages lined the way to the University in the morning, filled with friends of the graduates and of the institution. Evergreens and flowers decorated Villard Hall, and with the expectant moving mass of spectators, made a scene pleasant for the eye to behold. The Regents and Faculty occupied seats on the platform. The orchestra and choir rendered some excellent music. The opening prayer was delivered by Rev O. B. Whitmore. Our space will allow but a synopsis of the orations of the graduates, not doing entire justice to their efforts.

LEWIS J. DAVIS

Chose "Individuality" as the subject of his oration. It is the duty of every man said he to maintain and strengthen his individuality. By individuality is meant the positive force which enables man to detect those gleams of light that flash across his mind, and to remain free from those restraints that hinder or forbid the development or expression of those noble impulses which originate in the soul. The general and special forces of the Universe act in unison, and the separate action of any one tends to the harmony of the whole. This principle is true of the human soul and therefore individuality is necessary to all intellectual, social and moral development. We owe all the progress made during the ages to men of individuality. Within every soul there are unborn powers capable of being developed. True development in man consists in expanding not only one but the many faculties of the human mind. In the lower conditions men are the same; no division or distribution of labor; they are not individuals but alike. The simplicity of savage life has unfolded and expanded into all the complexity and diversity of a grand civilization. Where the rights of the individual have been recognized there have been happiness, prosperity, progress.

When Greece loosed the shackles from the minds of her people, her splendor shone to the skies; when Rome broke hers, she embraced the world. The growth and development of the American people have been wonderful. The heroic souls from the old world—from England, France, Holland and Ireland came to the new world; they were men of opinions, men willing to sacrifice all for their convictions; willing to fell the forest, to fight the savage, endure the perils and dangers of a wild and unknown land. Out of this mingling of ideas came the American Republic, the grandest the world has ever known. It declared, for the first time, that all men are created free and equal; that there should be no barrier placed in the way of man's aspirations, that manhood should be weighed in the scales of justice. It struck down the barriers that superstition and king craft raised between man and man.

The greatest intellects of our race, those who have unfolded extraordinary powers of genius, have been strongly individual, differing not only from the masses but from one another. Their individuality raised them above the horizon and gave them the power to shine during the ages with undiminished brightness. We do not want imitation even of the greatest. We want living, growing men, for they are the ones who lead the world. The history of intellectual development resolves itself into the biography of a few stout and earnest individuals. The human mind is the spring whence all excellence flows. Yet individuality the most sacred of its virtues has been subjected to the lash. Men who have had the courage to step to the front of the great army of humanity have heard the cry of halt. Individuality has given us better heads, better hearts, nobler men and nobler women. It has given us the great industries of life, the great inventions and discoveries; the surplus from which have sprung schools and universities, painters, sculptors and poets, the hopes and aspirations of the world.

EMMA C. DORRIS

Chose for the subject of her oration, "Growth of Astronomical Knowledge." Who of us has not in the solitary hours of night been arrested by the bright worlds above? Night is in truth the hour of solitude and separated from the busy life of day, question after question is presented to our minds. Astronomy can best teach us whom we are and where we are. Without it we could not form the slightest idea of the position we occupy in the universe. The astronomer has ever lived. He watched through ages of antedelvian life. After the deluge he is again at work and the pyramids of Egypt are his watch towers. After the dark ages he resumes his toil in Europe.

The first important step in the progress was the separation of the planets from the fixed stars, this was accomplished in remote times. The five planets were known from time immemorial. When science was banished from Greece, while science was slumbering during the dark centuries of ignorance, astronomy was slowly advancing. Kepler was the greatest among modern astronomers; ardent and enthusiastic he pursued his investigations with restless activity; difficulties sunk at his approach, obstacles melted before him. For eight years he worked before he found the orbit in which the planets did not move. Soon after this great negative triumph followed the renowned discoveries given to us as Kepler's three laws. More than two hundred years have passed since that time. Science has constantly advanced; planet after has been added to our system; suns and satelites have been discovered, yet all are found by Kepler's great laws. Galileo and Tycho Brahe were important gents in accomplishing a great scientific revolution. While Tycho Brahe was observing from his tower and furnishing means for Kepler's work Galileo was startling the world with his great mechanical discoveries. The magnificence and complexity of the great systems of planets, satellites and comets, attending our sun would seem to furnish sufficient exercise for all energy which the mind can exert; but with the grand instruments now in use this system becomes but an infinitesimal part of the universe of God. The adventures of the gods, the exploits of heroes, and the fancies of poets are perpetually in the heavens before all nations. In this boundless field of investigation, human genius has won its greatest victories, and inspired by success it still reaches out for new revelations, the limitless unchanging universe of God.

Yes, the heavens are the same yesterday, to-day and forever, but the human mind has penetrated the mysteries thereof. The daring genius of man sweeping across the interplanetary space finally reached the controlling center of our own great system. It has boldly plunged into depths of space, swept across the interstellar distances, and roaming from system to system looks out upon the Universe, and seeks the center from whence these millions of sweeping suns shall exhibit that magnificent harmony, which reigns throughout the vast empire of God

FRANK M MCLEAY'S

Oration embraced a wide field of thought and various subjects, but the leading theme was the early progress of man and the leading religions of the world—Christianity and Buddhism—contrasting the latter unfavorably with the former. The current of religious thought in India since three hundred years before the Christian era has been manifested in the Buddhist faith. In many important respects the faith of the Buddhist resembles that of Jesus Christ. The ceremonies, ritual and rites of the Buddhists are strikingly analagous to those of the Roman Catholics. The Buddhist priests are monks. They are bound by the same three vows of poverty, chastity and obedience which are binding on the church of Rome. They use the rosary and repeat strings of beads like the rosary and repeat their prayers in an unknown tongue. Both Buddhism and Christianity are Catholic and not ethnic, that is, not confined to a single race or nation. Buddhism, beginning among the Aryan people—the Hindus—was expelled from Hindostan and established itself among the Mongol races of Eastern Asia. In the same way Christianity began among the Jews as a semitic religion, but, being rejected, established itself among the Aryan race of Europe. Besides a resemblance to the Roman Catholic side of christendom, Buddhism has still closer analogies to the Protestant church. Like Protestantism, it is a reform which rejects a hierarchical system and does away with priestly caste. Like Protestantism, it emphasizes the purely human side of life, and is a religion in which humanity rather than formal piety prevails. Both Christian and Buddhist beliefs teach divine incarnation and recognize a God-Man. But history shows that neither was derived from the other, but each has grown up by its own natural development. Buddhism was derived from Brahminism and Christianity from Judaism. These systems have few analogies, and they could not have transmitted to their off-spring what they did not possess. Besides the resemblances, there are some equally important differences. Buddhism does not recognize the existence of an infinite being. It is atheistic in its teachings, and holds that every mortal, when he escapes re-birth and the horrors of transmigration, will finally become annihilated. Christendom is synonymous with a progressive civilization, while Buddhism is everywhere connected with a civilization which is arrested and stationary. Buddhism is a system of sublime morality, generous philanthropy and noble humanities, but the fatal defect which has neutralized its best qualities has certainly been the absence of a belief in an eternal world. Man is too great to be satisfied with time alone or eternity alone. He needs to live from and for both. Buddhism is one of the latest crazes that has seized the English-speaking people. It has been imported into our own country, and we are told that is to supplant Christianity in the minds of cultured people. Men are carried awry by this new fashion as they were by the æsthetic mania, which was successor to the first popular phase of Darwinism. Matthew Arnold has kept time and tune to this with his evolution of sweetness and light from a Christianity which he has sweetened and enlightened for genteel people by eliminating all that is supernatural and miraculous. Of all the crazes and freaks o the day nothing is more curious than the mixture of enthusiasm and languor with which certain Boston young women proclaim themselves Buddhists in religion, adopting new opinions as they would the latest fashion in dress. The hope of extinction or absorbtion of being to escape universal suffering and despair is the cream of Buddhist teaching, and this sour and curdled essence of hopelessness is the new gospel which our boasted modern culture is commending to us as being noble teaching and equal to the wisdom of Christ.

MISS ADA W. SHARPLES'

Subject was "The Spur to Inspiration." The dainty bark in which the nautilus of the period sails upon the sea is very different from the straight, unwieldy craft traced to the nautilus of ages past. The later one has been inspired to form a shell curved to catch the gale—a shape more durable and better suited to its purpose. So the animals upon the land have been inspired to develop habits suited to the time and clime in which they live. Their needs have been their inspiration. Looking to man we find that want has been the cradle of his civilization, and that the earliest source of his inspiration came from his greatest need, that of food. Man is a scheme for his own development. His beginning is low. Food is the the first great requirement for his development. It is the fuel that keeps the complicated machinery of his system working and in order. It enlarges the form and nourishes the brain and makes it the throne of reason. Chemists inform us that man is composed of thirteen elements—eight solids and five gases. These are drawn from the vegetable products of the earth, though a part first enters into the composition of the lower animals before it becomes fit food for man. To supply these thirteen elements for an average man a year requires nearly a ton and a half of materials. Hence it appears that man's first inspiration to study must have been how to produce his food, and as that comes from the surface of the earth it is not strange that agriculture became his first industry. In upper Egypt man first became civilized and lived by agriculture. The food supply depended on the annual overflow of the river Nile. Watching for signs of the coming overflow led to scanning the heavens for the star Sirius that appeared just before the rise, and that was the beginning of the study of astronomy. The study of astronomy now is the acknowledged basis of intellectual development throughout the scientific world. The fact that water and heat were required to make the soil produce, gave rise to the worship of water and fire. As civilization advanced man became inspired with a belief in a supreme being and in the soul of man. At the same time an almost equal advance in civilization was made in Peru and in a part of Mexico, while Europe remained altogether barbarous. Many nations followed the plan of man's physical development, commencing with a low beginning, advancing to a useful maturity and then declining gradually to decay. The ancients had a very erroneous idea of geography. The Greeks believed the world three stories high. As civilization advanced man craved luxuries, and trade and intercourse between nations were established. As a result of this spirit Columbus discovered America, and Ferdinand Magellan circumnavigated the world. The north pole would be discovered if there was a chance of finding something there good to eat. In pursuing trade and commerce and the wants of life man has investigated the sciences—philosophy, chemistry, geology, botany, etc. The ancient world was represented by a man on horseback. Wealth now discards the saddle for the Pullman car. Now with universal education before us we wonder what prodigious possibilities want can inspire the future to unfold.

Lewis J. Davis then delivered the VALEDICTORY.

As the golden sunset announces the close of a happy day so this Commencement with all its intellectual associations and with all its fragrant flowers and well wishes closes the long and toil-some college work of another class. It is indeed painful to us when we contemplate the changes in our lives that this day announces. We to-day sever our connection as students with this University—with an institution that has been for years a guardian angel to our most cherished hopes, a moderator to vaulting ambitions, a patient bearer of the cup of knowledge, a sweet mother to longing souls University of Oregon, henceforth we must regard you not as our guardian angel that is, but that was. Yet we are glad to leave you in growing greatness and increasing excellence, clothed in robes of past success, alive with strengthening energies, and all gilded with happy prospects. May your influence extend to all the young men and women of this new and our progressing state, grand educational opportunities.

Members of the Board of Regents under your vigilance and careful guidance this institution has taken many rapid strides forward until to day the University of Oregon in thoroughness of discipline, completeness of instruction and excellence of scholarship, ilits itself grandly among its Northwestern contemporaries. And since it has been amid this prosperity that the class of '89 has spent its college days we feel that in this parting hour it is fitting that we mingle our thanks with our farewells.

Our Honored President and Members of the Faculty our feelings toward you at this time can be realized only by those who in the course of their lives have had to take their departure from able instructors and learned professors, from those who have ever been zealous in promoting their wellbeing, lighting up their pathway with superior wisdom, guiding them over the great mountain barriers that frown danger and trial to the aspiring mind; and from those who have been to them patient teachers, kind friends and fatherly counsellors. We shall no longer, as we have done for many years, here pass under your daily guidance, but must go to other fields of labor. Instructors of knowledge we leave you to-day only to pass under the tutelage of the severe instructors of experience. We go from the University to contend with the world, yet all the robes of care and trial that coming years may throw around us and all the clouds that may arise from the battle fields of life can never, never shut out the rays that now light up our minds, the rays that emanate from the fact that we have been your pupils. Professors with the sincerest thanks for the past and the kindest wishes for the future we bid you good-bye; farewell.

Classmates for many years we have anxiously looked forward to this day, yet how painfully do we feel the thorns among the roses. To me and to you it is not all sunshine for it is the day that announces our parting from friends and students, from professors and from one another. It tells us that we are to leave the old and enter the new. We must now march out into the arena of life. And when we are there let us avoid those ways that lead down and take those that lead up. God did not intend this life to be mean. He made it grand; He made it glorious. He decked its wayside with flowers; He paved it with diamonds. Over it He placed the starry arch of Heaven and around it all that is magnificent and sublime. Emblazing upon all this handiwork the letters that spell out the words that tell us life is for a purpose. Let us make it a grand opportunity to do and to achieve. Let us want the best and let us make that want the spur to our inspirations. Let us strive earnestly, steadfastly and confidently to better mankind. And if ever in our labors the sun goes down let us look up to the stars; and if the earth is dark let us keep our eyes on the Heavens which (as one of you has just said) are the same yesterday, to-day and forever. If in this spirit we will think out our work and then work out our thought we need have no fear for future success, happiness and honor. The judgment of the world will then echo the sentiment of our motto: Palman qui meruit ferat.

Classmates our work here is finished and now for each one of us, individually and for all as a class I again bid the University of Oregon with all its endeared relations a kind farewell.

At the conclusion of each oration the graduate was made the recipient of numerous beautiful bouquets.

By request of President J. W. Johnson, Hon. L. L. McArthur delivered the diplomas to the class and conferred upon each the degree of A B., prefacing the act by a short and pointed talk, replete with kind and practical advice.

The exercises of the law department took place at 3 p. m. Essays were read as follows: "Leaders of Men," by Fitz Roy Osborn; "Thomas H Benton," F L Keenan; "Law an Educating Force," Geo M. Miller; "Alexander Hamilton," by Wm. E. Berkheimer. The essays proved that the reasoning faculties of the graduates had not been neglected by the lecturers of the law school The class, consisting of Fitz Roy Osborn, F L Keenan, Geo. M Miller, Wm. E. Berkheimer, M L. Bergman, S. J. McNall and Perry Q Rathbrock, received their diplomas and the degrees of L L D at the hands of Hon. M. P. Deady, by request of President Johnson, after a short address by the learned judge.

In the evening about eighty of the Alumni, with members of the Board of Regents and Faculty, sat down to an elegant banquet spread in the dining room of the Hoffman House.

And thus ended Commencement Day of 1889 A prosperous year for the University, and promising success and prosperity for the future.

Cottage Grove Items.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

June 19, 1889.

Wild blackberries are beginning to ripen.

Rev. Wiltse and family left this place Monday for Albany.

Several new buildings are in course of construction at Cottage Grove.

Mr. Briggs, the photograph man, has been doing a lively business here of late.

Miss Alice Damewood is stopping at Mr. John Tait's, near Creswell, at present.

We have been informed that there will be no celebration at Cottage Grove the 4th of July.

Mrs. G. W. McCoy passed here Saturday on her way to Springfield to see her daughter, who was very sick with lung fever.

Coyotes are seen and heard frequently on the hills in this vicinity. Mr J. H Veatch shot at one last week, but failed to kill it.

Mr J. C. Wallace went to Omro the 15th and returned the 16th, accompanied by Mr. Gray, who is going to build Mr. W. a house.

Miss Pearl Charles' school on Silk creek closed Friday, June 14, and Mrs. Leroy Damewood began a term of two months Monday at the same place.

We received a copy of the Cottage Grove Leader. The first newspaper ever published at Cottage Grove was printed June 15, 1889, and is a credit to the place as well as the proprietor. VERITY.

Notice to Contractors.

Bids for the carpenter work and painting on a school house in District No. 1, Pleasant Hill, will be received by the undersigned until July 1, 1889. Plans and specifications may be seen at the Register office, Eugene. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved. Address

JOHN BLUME,
Pleasant Hill, Lane Co., Oregon.

A VARIETY RUNAWAY.—Al Churchill had a runaway Wednesday evening that did not lack variety. A young stallion he was driving on Willamette street in a road cart became unmanageable and ran to the depot. He crossed the track and started east between the main and side tracks until he reached the point where the tracks joined, then took down the track to Oak street, crossing switches without accident. Mr. Churchill finally stopped the horse at the Baptist church.

MUSICAL CONCERT.—On the evening of July 3d a concert will be given at Rhinehart's Parlors by Mrs. Laura Kincaid, assisted by the best talent of Eugene. Some of the principal arias from the operas, "Faust," "Lucrezia Borgia," "Don Giovanna," "Daughter of the Regiment," etc, will be given. Also recitations and tableaux. An Ives & Pond piano will be used on the occasion. Mrs. Kincaid recently graduated at the Boston Conservatory of music, after three years of study of musical sciences. A full programme next week.

TWENTY-FIVE DAYS.—A man by the name of Van Alstine, who has caused considerable work for the police, got too much of the ardent and concluded to chastise her whom he had promised to cherish and protect, last Saturday. She objected and got a warrant for his arrest. He was tried before Justice Henderson and got twenty-five days in jail By the time his sentence expires he will probably conclude that a married man should forbear from using violence against his wife.

THE CIRCUS.—Sells Bros' circus showed in Eugene Monday afternoon and evening to small audiences than usual. The parade in the morning was interesting and the performance under the canvas was creditable. As usual the skin games caught a number of victims who should have known better; one party is reported to have lost over $200 trying to beat the game. It seems almost useless to warn people against such games for they walk into the trap despite the warning. It was little better than highway robbery.

SIUSLAW RAILROAD.—A meeting of the directors of the Siuslaw & Eastern Navigation Co. was held in Eugene recently, and it was ordered that the president and secretary be authorized to make a contract for a preliminary survey of the line between Eugene and Florence. O. Boomhower was appointed general agent of the company.

A CLEAR VIEW.—The sign have been taken from across the walks this week, greatly improving the appearance of the street. The view along the sidewalks is now free from obstruction.

A TRUTH.—Reports from Eastern Oregon state that in some localities the crops will be almost an entire failure on account of the dry weather. Thousands of acres will not pay for cutting. Cattle are being sold at a very low figure on account of lack of feed.

Edwin Russ, of McMinnville, has been granted a free scholarship in the State University, and will attend the next session of school.

Sherwood Burr has several farms for sale at a bargain. If you want to invest in land give him a call. see his ad in another column.

Geo. Thompson's horse sale last week was well attended and the horses brought good prices. He disposed of about 80 head in two days.

B. S. Burroughs has been appointed postmaster at Pendleton, vice Clopton, removed; and U. S. Grant at Dallas, vice J. A. Waugaman, removed.

M. S. Barker had a neat advertising dodge on the street circus day in the person of a man, representing a rooster, distributing business cards.

Goldsmith, the grocer, has just received from the East one of the largest assignments of lamps ever brought to Eugene. He will sell them at prices that defy competition.

Midgley & Parker at their factory on 8th street, east of the mill race, manufacture and keep for sale, doors, windows, frames, mouldings, etc. Estimates furnished on application.

Carpets of every style and grade at Friendly's. These carpets have just arrived and have been well selected to meet the demands of this market. Call and examine his varied assortment.

Take warning all you farmers that have summer fallow to work go and get one of Paine's Boss Cultivators, and stop your fooling. The Boss does the biz and don't you forget it.

Dr. W. V. Henderson has returned from Chicago, where he took a course of lectures and instruction in the latest methods of dentistry. Call and see him at his office if you are in need of work.

S. H Friendly keeps the largest and best assortment of clothing, ladies dress goods, hats, etc. He is continually adding the latest and newest styles to his stock. His prices are fixed to suit the times.

The best family remedy is undoubtedly Plunder's Oregon Blood Purifier. It may be safely given to the infant as well as to the adult, and it will give relief where other medicines fail to do so. Keep it in the house.

The ladies should call at J. D. Matlock's store and examine that beautiful and carefully selected stock of ladies dress goods. Spring and Summer patterns of the latest styles, and quality to suit the buyer.

Comrades and soldiers of late war are requested to meet at post hall on July 4th, at 9:30 a. m., to take part in the procession on that day. By order of J. T MARTIN, Commander.

Mr. James Whitcaker, son of Gov. Whitcaker, was nominated last week for recorder of East Portland. Last Monday the election occurred, and he made a good run, although defeated by 59 votes, the Republicans having nearly 200 majority in that city.

The "University Bookstore" handles new and staple goods only; there are no better in the market. Everything is fresh and clean. There is no need of trumping up accient shelf worn drug; no reduced prices dodge or other kindred devices, and no imitating of other parties' advertisements or facilities.
