The California Scale Bug.

An Oregonian correspondent suggests a remedy for the scale bug that is now in Southern Oregon, and is liable to infest the Willamette valley. He writes:

Seeing in your issue of the 14th an article on California scale bug just reaching Oregon, wish to say I have had much experience in the use of copperas (sulphate of iron) as an agency in the destruction of all manner of lice and enemies to fruit and flower trees in Washington territory, and this spring at Oakland, Cal., at 1961 Green street I applied it to the roots of an almost ruined white rose bush covered with the scale and in four weeks it had turned from a sickly to a bright green, and scarcely a scale bug to trouble it. They would batch and go to the tender end, where the iron taken up in the circulation soon made wreck of their fat comforts.

Take any cherry tree or bush, old or young, when the sap is flowing rapidly, carefully dig a trench around the tree a distance from the trunk to nicely reach the ends of the fibrous roots, taking care not to injure, then distribute from a teacup full to even five pounds of copperas well pulverized, and return the earth and you will surely catch your man. Sap-sucking insects will let loose of this iron bitters and your tree will smile and your fruit be much improved in quality. Don't be stingy of the iron. You can get at least four pounds for 15 cents. On perpetual growing or bearing shrubs or fruiting trees it could make but little difference when put on.

The fruiting and blooming trees and shrubs of Oregon and California are dying for the iron food. Remember the old horseshoes and scythes hung in grandpa's orchard trees, and the old rusty nails that somehow used to act like magic when driven into the trees? Try an old rusty nail in a vigorous tree even and see how soon the greedy circulation will make the nail disappear by absorption. Cut this out and try to follow directions and if you fail of good results notify me and I will pay for the copperas bill.

Very Cleverly Done.

Two Swedes were victimized to the extent of $100 in a saloon near the depot Thursday. They were induced to enter by a confederate, and saw a couple of the "confidence men" at a table, ostensibly playing poker. Just as they arrived one of the sharpers remarked to his companion: "I'll bet you $100 I hold the biggest hand." The latter replied that he did not have the money or he would take the bet. Looking over their shoulders, the victims saw that the first man had four kings and the last four aces, and thinking to double their capital easily they put up the necessary $100 and took the bet on their own hands. In the discard, the sharper slipped away one of his aces and his confederate took the pot on his four kings, while the Swedes came out at the little end of the horn. The "Lost Ace" of the minstrels was reproduced.

Such affairs as these occur in Pendleton almost daily, and law abiding citizens are beginning to ask themselves: "Is there no balm in Gilead?"—Pendleton E. O.
