J. W. Stewart to M. J. Walker, one lot; $1. Animals Injured by Railroads. An eye to John J. states that it has been in danger with heavy cars on a single track intended to leave the tracks at 4 P. M. until it should be killed by section hand, and the impression that if any person had a railroad employee killed the animal it would remove the liability of the road. It is not an unusual sight to see a poor cow slowly stepping out its life because the engineer labors under this impression. The loss is a mistake on his part, however, for the owner can at any time remove the animal and kill it without any member leaving the chances of getting pay for his property.
