FUTURE AMERICAN POETS.

Edmund Clarence Stedman Feels Very Hopeful as to Them In a recent conversation Edmund Clarence Stedman, referring to the older poets of America, remarked as follows: "In the case of the two oldest survivors in song-Mr. Whittier and Dr. Holmes-we observe their admirers grow more extended in numbers with the spread of culture in our land. If their voices are not heard as frequently as formerly, it is not because they have grown less strong and sweet, for with each new utterance as it comes to us from time to time we are unable to detect any variation in the tones we all long ago so easily learned

"Lowell is less often heard now-adays than he used to be, but it is not, as we know, because of any diminution in the quality of that voice whose music is so appreciated by all cultivated people everywhere. Our only been appreciated as his first love, and from time to time, notwithstanding advancing years and

I can not help feeling that the outlook for poetry in this country is encouraging, though, and will not deny that with the younger and coming singers altogether too much stress is laid upon the more painful forms of verse. The volumes of verse emanating from month to month from the younger writers do not contain that distinctive character of work such as belonged to that formative period when Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier and Lowell, and the writers immediately following them, wrought for a waiting people. Longfellow's "Lost Youth" in itself was sufficient to establish the reputation of any poet who could produce such a masterplece. How few of our younger writers give us any thing like And yet there is no reason why such poems can not be written to-day as in Longfellow's early years. My advice to our coming singers is-do not give so much attention to the lighter forms of verse-making, but seek to produce something which shall be full of real character, and shall stand apart, as it were, from the dainty order of verse referred to. These bits of verse are all pretty enough, and of course are in a given sense promises of something better to come, but that is all. Still, as I have said, there is much encouragement to believe that the outlook for poetry in this country is bright, since every now forded as evidence of this fact, as in dollars were the coins made. the case of Woodberry's "The North Shore Watch," one of the finest elegiac soems of recent times; also in the case of Millor's "Songs of the Sierras," and several of Sidney Lanier's compositions, such as the "Song of the Chattahoochee," "The Revenge of Hamish," and "The Murshes of Glynn." I trust the day is near as hand when I shall be free from the pressure of outside duties and cares, and can give more attention to poetry than I have been able to devote to it for some time past. With the completion of the work on "American Literature," on which I have been engaged for a considerable period of time, I shall feel that I can once more take up the work nearest my

THOUGHTS ON LIFE

Why It Is Well That We Can Not Look

Life would not be happy if we could look into every body's mind and know exactly what our neighbor was thinking about. If we could see the spirit as easily as we can look at the body we would be afraid to go along the street. If we were sympathetic it would be a constant misery; if we were cold our best friends would have nothing to do with us; if we were victous nobody would speak to us; if we were virtuous we would make any number of enemies. I wonder whether, in that rebelious spiritual state, which we can imagine as the only possible next form of existence, we shall all be known exactly as we are. We must then be all purely good, and it is not easy to see how that is to be brought about unless death is a kind of filter and absorb all our wickednesses. It will take an awful lot of charcoal to take out all our impurities.

But, still, life is for all of us a lone ly kind of business. Friendship, love, to Lucy Webb Hayes. sympathy, confidence, trust are all very well. Yet are there things they can not aid or remove. We have all some grief in which we must tread the at Lockport, N. Y., has adopted a resolu-winepress alone. I suppose there ion indorsing Corporal Tanner. winepress alone. I suppose there would be even more trouble if we started in to try to help one another in real earnestness. I suppose we would make a mess of it. There are people who want to be let alone and people who want sympathy, and the perversity of things is such that you invariably worry the fellow who wants to be let alone with your sympathy and let the fellow alone who is anxlous to be helped. come people when they are sick are angry and annoyed if you call to see them; others never forgive you if you don't go to see them. A soil containing free lime, potash o magnesia is in condition to form rapidly in warm weather under tilage valuable compounds of nitrogen, which will hasten plant growth. This process, called ultrafaction of the soil, does not go on rapidly in the absence of lime, potash, soda, etc., hence the importance of applying lime and potash to soils deficient in them.

Good Use for House Slops .-- If you save all the slops from the house, the wash-water, and sude of sundry occasions during the week you will find that you have a supply of nutriment at hand to poor soil permanently rich, but it will afford sufficient nutriment to nourish such plants as you grow in it during the summer in a very satisfactory manner. Last year a crop of millet was sown in a four-acre field, that had been in pasture for several years and had been well manured. The crop grew thickly and tali—nearly six feet—before the heads began to appear, and it was cut be-fore half the heads had emerged from the sheaths. The four acres yielded twentyfive large two-horse wagon loads of half-cured fodder, which was put into a small silo sixteen by twenty and fifteen feet deep. The fodder fed eight head of horses and celts, two yoke of working oxen. fifteen head of two-and-three-year old steers and heifers, fourteen yearlings and a bull, equal to forty-two head for eleven weeks, and the fodder was eaten greedil to the last without any waste. The controlling features of the business situation have undergone but little change since the close of last week, the distributive movement of trade having been satisfactorily maintained, while reports from all important interior distributing centers reflect the same satisfactory corditions both as to character and extent of the autumn demand. Coffees remain firm at last quotations. Sugars are lower all round. The fresh fruit market is still firm and active. Fresh vegetables are still in good receipt and prices are well maintained. For dairy, produce and poultry there is not much to report, last week's prices being well maintained. Wheat is more active and firmer. Flour and feed is unchanged, the demand continuing good. The girls are rather pretty, cream-complexioned young maidens of eight and ten, who are as much like American girls as they can be, considering their susroundings. They wear European clothes, and may be seen along the sea shore at Alexanderia, walking together and swinging their hats in their hands like our little girls at Long Branch or Asbury Park. They have European governesses and talk French quite well. These children are by no means badly off as regards money matters. The Khediye's income is big enough to enable him to pay all of his expenses, and his wife as an independent fortune, which, I am told, brings her in about $50,000 a year for pin money. Abbas, the eldest son, is the heir apparent, and gets an allowance of $75,000 a year, and all have enough and to spare. Still, in comparison with the fortunes squandered by the Khedives of the past this is nothing, and the present Khedive does what any other monarch of the world would not think of doing. The last year was a poor one in Egypt. and the people were hardly able to pay their taxes. In order to relieve them somewhat the Khedive ordered that the salaries of all officers should be cut down for that year, ten per cent., and he set the example, I am told, by cutting that much off the allowance for his family and dropped off $50,000 from his personal allowance for the sake of his people. This does not seem the act of a Pharaoh. It is more than that of a man and a Christian. It shows that this Mohammedan ruler is a King in heart and soul, as well as in position, and may well lead us to wonder whether this land under him, if freed from debt and unshackled by shylocks would not rise to a higher and better civilization than it has ever had in the 6,000 years of its past -

Cor. N. Y. World. CHILDREN AND MONEY. Some Reusons Why Boys and Girls Should

If children have no money of their own, how can they learn to manage it? Begin when they are very young, and teach them gradually the use of money, by arranging household work so they can earn a few pennies, and perhaps by giving moneyed rewards for special excellence in school. Whonever children are given money let them understand it is because they have earned it by good behavior. Money should not be doled out to a child as it were to a beggar. It has a right to its allowance; and the children that are early taught that they must furnish equivalent for money received learn the value of money, and grow to be respected because they are self-respecting. The plan we have suggested is followed in many families, and each child is paid a fixed sum for certain duties. While the sums earned by smaller children are Individual plates for vegetables are trivial, the children are compelled to pay out certain small necessary expenses from them, and to contribute a penny of the earnings to the church contribution-box each Sunday. As soon as they have a dollar saved they are urged to put it in the bank, unless at a distance from the stove, so that it it is near a birthday or the holidays, when extraordinary expenditures are When recipes call for a cupful it in order.
