

HISTORY OF WHEAT.

The Humble Ancestor of the Frontier Grain of Our Day.

Wheat has its classical name, Tritium, from tritos, beaten, as the grain is threshed out of the spikes. It is an annual with hollow, erect, knotted stems. The ear has a zigzag stalk. The flowers are crowded, the outer, or flowering glume has the beard. The grain is the matured ovary with its contents. It has a longitudinal furrow on one side, which with the pointed ends and broadened center, makes it appear boat-shaped, though children love to play with a little old man wrapped in a shawl. It is indeed a more wonderful conjurer than Midas, the transmuter into gold, for it performs the miracle of transubstantiation in really becoming flesh and blood.

The golden race of the wheat is a very ancient one. Its humble ancestor was a dewy grass with small seed known as "Goat grass" and abundant on the shores of the Mediterranean. Long periods of time were necessary to change wheat from its wild form into what is good a variety as the lake wheat used in Switzerland until the time of the Roman conquest. But better varieties were gradually developed in Egypt, Greece and other warm climates. And the effort has been continuous to grow still larger grains. There is also an attempt to grow hardier varieties which will finally be proof.

It was a providential accident when the slave of Cortez brought to Mexico a few grains of wheat, for upon those little germs, dropped into the soil of a new world, the development of a great wheat in large measure dependent. Wheat is worth more than gold. Rome was victorious so long as her armies could be fed, but she declined when her fields of grain became vineyards.

Wheat has itself been compared to an offering by sun and wind. Millions of stalks stand together of the same height, millions of ears of about the same number of grains, the whole growing as one, bending as one to the ripening as one in that perfect discipline which nature has achieved. The field of wheat imparts the sunshine and makes a color unlike all others. It gives shelter to timid creatures, and food to the joyous bird. It fills a small gold scepter and at its base man hastens to fill houses and barns with the largess of kings. Only known in the western hemisphere since the sixteenth century, there are in the United States alone more than 270 varieties. Among so many there are of course varieties as to color, but every wheat-fideli, or devotee, is a triumph of culture, and reality the gold of the magic caves of the Arabian Nights—Belle P. Drury, in Arena, Field and Stockman.

CONCERNING VANITY.

The Only Effective Corrective of the Vice of Envy.

Envy is so prevalent in its forms that frequently escapes all but the most penetrating of observers. When it is not at work in any of its commoner more palpable forms, it will generally be found on examination to exist in some subtler shape. Neither religion nor any of its ancient or modern substitutes is any guarantee for its absence. The meekest Christian may exhibit its meekness with inward self-complacency, the most stoical and cynical of philosophers may be secretly proud of what he imagines to be his freedom from vanity. The old story of the man who was trampled upon the "pride of the great pride" upon the "pride of the great pride" is true for all times and countries. There is no man who does not at the bottom of his heart congratulate himself on some real or fancied superiority over his fellow-man. And he who prides himself modestly as regards his points of pre-eminence will often be vain with respect to the inferior ones. Most of us must be content with men of intellectual distinction who pride themselves upon the mental attractions which exist only in their imagination, and the empty-patched man who reserves the complacency which he might well have reserved for the outside of his head for its undervaluing exterior. The man of ideas is often vain in his imaginary practical ability; while the man of affairs persuades himself of his real strength lies in the region of speculative thought. Frederick the Great set far less store by his reputation as a soldier and a ruler than by his military and literary abilities which he allowed to raise him to the level of a first-rate flute-player and a first-rate musician. Richelieu's achievements as a statesman never gave him, probably, a sense of the pleasure that he derived from his sorry Alexandrines. And it is fortunate for both these great men that something were ill-selected for them, for the feeling of self-satisfaction, whether well or ill founded, is a more unalloyed and unselfish pleasure to the human being than anything with which this mortal state is blessed. It is a pleasure, too, which reacts in a certain sense upon the larger; and the social value of it is not half sufficiently appreciated by the philosopher. It is perhaps the only efficient, corrective of the vice of envy, which torments a sufficient number of men as it does, which, without its happy anti-thesis, would make this plane of existence in a place of residence. PERNICIOUS SILENCE.

Do Not Hesitate to Cheer and Encourage Your Children and Employers.

There are times when speech is unreasonable, but there are also times when silence is wrong and even cruel. If there is much said that should never have been breathed, there is also much that ought to have free utterance which is never spoken. It is impossible to estimate the amount of happiness and benefit that is suppressed by this untimely silence. Not only to the absent, but sometimes to those present with us, is silence cruel. There is a wholesome dread of flattery among honest people, which not infrequently leads them into an opposite extreme of withholding praise where it is due. Much discouragement and many abandoned efforts may be traced to this source. Of course, it is not the ideal of manliness to require such a motive, but few approach the ideal, and few can dispense with the motive. The young and inexperienced, the humble and self-deprecating, and all beginners especially, need every sincere word of encouragement that can be given. It is a stimulus which no parent, no teacher and no employer can afford to set aside. Has the child been faithful, obedient, studious, self-denying? Tell him so, and express the real pleasure you feel. Has the young man proved himself trustworthy, indefatigable, intelligent? Let him have the satisfaction of knowing that you appreciate his efforts. Has the timid beginner in some enterprise done well for a first attempt? Do not deny him the incentive to further efforts that your approval will afford him. Silence at such times is not a mere negative, a blank, an omission; it is a positive injury, a bar to improvement, a destroyer of well-earned happiness. Then, too, happiness, of whatever kind, needs utterance. Sadness and gloom, pain and distress, may well have the shield of silence to prevent their diffusion, but every thing that is bright, cheery and delightful should be shared and spread as far as possible. Yet how frequently is this reversed, and the misfortunes of life are disclosed in all their details, while its blessings are passively accepted without remark. The shadows are eagerly described, while of the sunlight nothing is said. Is not this also a cruel silence? Happiness is to the heart what sunlight is to the body, and he who shuts out either is an enemy to society. There are persons who will work for the good of their fellow-men, who will give money and time, labor and thought, to reforms and schemes for general welfare, who will not hesitate to make sacrifices to perform benevolent and kindly actions, but who never give free and hearty utterance to the gladness that they may feel, or the pleasure they enjoy. It is not that they intend to deprive any one of happiness, but they do not realize how much they could thus bestow. While trying in many ways to give light and warmth to their fellow-men, they let their own sunshine, forgetting that its influence might extend far and wide. Let all such pernicious silence be speedily broken. If the day is fair, and the air pure and clear, let us emphasize the fact; if we see any beauty, let us point it out; if we feel any joy, let us hasten to share it; if we have received any good let us freely express it. St. Paul tells us, "Whatever things are true, or honest, or just, or pure, or lovely, or of good report, or if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." And if, as we think, we also speak of them with freedom and gladness, the world will be happier and better for our having lived in it.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CASH FOR CATS' SKINS.

How Poor Pussy Assumes the Role of a Fur-Bearing Animal.

"Cash paid for cats' skins," the sign read in the window of a Washington furrier, who astonished the newspaper man by telling him that there was always a good market for pussies' pelts. "Five cents apiece," he said, "is what we pay for common skins, ten cents for matted pure, and twenty-five cents for black. Of course they may be in good condition. Some male cats are so given to back-fence warfare that their hides become considerably damaged. The fur of the sleek and well-tended domestic pussy is what we find most available for our purposes. Street cats are usually too ragged and coarse-haired to be useful."

"And what are the purposes of which you speak?" "The imitation of more expensive furs, chiefly. The French dye them very skillfully, and in that way transform the humble tabby after death into the regal ermine or other beast of rare and costly skin. The pure black and matted and the tortoise shell are not dyed, but made to serve in the natural colors. Rugs of selected tortoise-shell and matted are already becoming quite fashionable, and the best ones are far from cheap. The only use made of cats' pelts in this country is in the manufacture of carriage robes, but vast numbers of them are sent from the United States to Europe, where they are made into coats, hats, rugs, dressing-gown linings and other garments.

"Taxidermists, too, in other parts of the country are advertising for kittens by the thousand for stuffing. In the process they employ the skin in its natural condition, leaving only the scraped top of the skull within it. Both head and body are then built up with pipe clay and sawdust, a piece of wire being so adjusted that one end comes out through the forehead and the other at the tip of the tail. To this four other wires running down the legs are fixed. The skin is then sewn up and the animal forced into a desired position. The final operation is putting in the eyes. Fastened upon a scrap of red flannel in this manner, a small black kitten makes a very pretty pen-wiper."

"But where do all the skins come from?" "Many are brought in the city establishments that advertise for them by small boys who are glad to earn pocket money by the comparatively easy method of assassinating a few unfortunate cats; but the main supply is contributed by professional fur collectors in different parts of the country, who shoot them. The ravine woods of New England are full of them running wild. They breed wonderfully fast under such seemingly adverse conditions and can be popped off the fences and walls with ease by an expert marksman. This is an idle season just now, and we are advertising for a carriage-robe material to make up the fall trade. A first-rate lap-robe of catskin is worth forty or fifty dollars. Yes, indeed, pussy is beginning to be recognized as a fur-bearing animal, and instead of drowning the kittens, people will before long be preserving them for their pelts."—Washington Star.

GERMAN CAVE-DWELLERS.

Dwellings Hewn in the Rocks of the Hartz Mountains.

Cave-dwellers in civilized Europe? It seems incredible; and yet, just above the thriving village of Langenstein, in the Hartz Mountains, and forming a part of it, are about ten dwellings hewn in the rocks. They are called the "Burg," or "castle," and here some forty persons have their home. In the face of the solid rock is to be seen a row of regular-shaped doors and windows, one door and one window belonging to each dwelling. The most ancient of these dwellings is the work of a young married couple whose extreme poverty gave them no other choice than to seek a home in the rugged mountain-side. Their work was no light task to pick away the rock bit by bit, as one workman must, with no tool but his pick-axe. Through the doorway one enters a narrow, straight hallway, at the right of which another doorway leads into a good-sized room with a window, the only one in the dwelling. Opposite this doorway, at the left of the entry, is a shell-shaped hollow which serves as a sleeping-room. In which, however, straw supplies the place of a bed. Back of this, at the left, is a storeroom; opposite it, adjoining the living or sitting room, is the kitchen, with fireplace and chimney; and back of the kitchen is another sleeping-room. The latter has no opening for light, yet, as the house-door is usually open the greater part of the year, there is light enough to see by. The walls are of the natural rock, and the apartments are perfectly dry, and not badly ventilated with the door, window and chimney, which create a slight draft through the dwelling at all times. The place is warm in winter and cool in summer, and the inmates are rosy and healthy. Some of the cave-dwellers have whitewashed their houses, and made little gardens outside so that the exterior does not display a forbidding appearance. At any rate, these cave-dwellings are quite as comfortable (and certainly more sanitary) habitations than the cellars of our cities, which are leased to stretched inmates, and are only caves of masonry.—Democrat's Monthly.

DR. DARRIN'S ART

Of treating diseases by electricity is, like many other good things in medicine, new, but its principle of action is so little understood that its employment at the present day makes it practically a new discovery.

The medical profession at large, not possessing the true secret of the proper remedies to use, are still blundering in the dark and throwing discredit through their ignorance on one of the greatest medical advances of the present day.

For the benefit of those to whom this plan of cure is new, and who may be seeking aid, though distrustful, after many failures of everybody and everything, the Dr. Darrin desires to explain simply and logically the theory of electro-therapeutics, and leave them as men of common sense and judgment to take or refuse the aid offered, as their arguments and examinations are based on known physiological facts and experiments. They ask nothing beyond a fair hearing and a fair trial.

Deafness Cured in Ten Minutes.—Mr. Editor.—For some time I have been troubled with partial deafness, and lately could scarcely hear in one ear, with a constant ringing noise. I consulted a doctor in Portland, which did me no good. I finally went to Dr. Darrin and in less than ten minutes he cured me with electricity. I am an engineer on the steamer City of Tokio, running from Astoria to Kalamazoo. G. SCHMITH.

One He Had Plunged on His Face.—Mr. Editor.—For ten years past I have been troubled with nervous debility and pimples on my face and body, as hundreds of other young men are afflicted with. Have been under Dr. Darrin's electric treatment for six months and now find myself restored to health, and the pimples have all disappeared. Refer to me at Malibu, Clackamas county, Or. C. E. KNOTT.

CHRONIC CATARRH

Cannot be cured by local application. It is a constitutional disease and requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and soon effects a permanent cure.

At the same time Hood's Sarsaparilla builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in strength and health. Be sure to get Hood's. I suffered severely from chronic catarrh, arising from impure blood. It became very bad, causing soreness of the bronchial tubes, and a troublesome cough, which was great anxiety to my friends and myself, as it brooded died from bronchial consumption. I tried many medicines, but received no benefit. I was at last induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I am not the same man in health or feelings. My catarrh is cured, my throat is entirely well, and a dyspepsia trouble, with sick headache, have also been cured. K. M. LINDSAY, 25 Chambers St., Boston.
