Chittim Bark Industry.
Corvallis Gazette.
The party consisting of Brit S. Harris, Lyman Kelby, Harry Hoffman and Ned Simmons organized here some time last May to secure chittim bark (whose scientific name is Cassara sagra) along the Willamette river, have returned. They embarked in a scow and between Corvallis and Oregon City they obtained about 12 tons of the product. When the bark is sold the boys will realize a considerable sum for their labor. It is only within recent years that it became known about here that there is a market for the bark which is produced in considerable quantities along most all the streams of Oregon. It grows abundantly in Benton county, and especially in that portion of the county west of the Coast mountains. The trees are stripped in the spring from top to root, the bark is taken in a length convenient for handling, then dried, and in this form is usually disposed of by those who gather it. It is finely ground and enters largely into the manufacture of various medicines. The price of the "raw material" varies according to supply and demand, but is subject to corners as other products. At present the dried bark is worth $70 per ton in Portland or San Francisco, but this is regarded as low, it being the season of the year when the spring crop is being crowded on the market. In the fall and winter the price sometimes reaches a fancy figure.

Don't Believe It
When told that F. M. Wilkins, the druggist, is not selling "William's Robertson" for the completion, the most elegant and only really harmless preparation of its kind in the world, and giving a beautiful picture card with every bottle.
Give Them a Chance!
That is to say, your lungs; Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and capillaries leading from them. When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are had. All ought to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

Change is one of the irremediable laws of nature, and fortunately the change is almost invariably for the better. As an illustration of this, St. Patrick Pills are fast taking the place of the old harsh and irritating cathartics, because they are mild and much more beneficial in removing the matter from the system and preventing the other malarious diseases. As a cathartic and liver pill they are almost perfect. For sale by Osburn & Co.

On a recent visit to Iowa, Mr. K. Dalton, of Dundy, Russell county, Kansas, called in the laboratory of Chamberlain & Co., Des Moines, to show them his six year old boy, whose life had been saved by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, it having cured him of a severe attack of croup. Mr. Dalton is certain that it saved his boy's life and is enthusiastic in his praise of the Remedy. He says it has an excellent reputation in his vicinity; that farmers come fifteen miles to his store for it. For sale by Osburn & Co.

Salt Lake City.
We are indebted to Mr. T. J. Cheshire for an interesting letter descriptive of Salt Lake City:
SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 8, 1890.
EDITOR GUARD:—From what I had heard and read of Salt Lake, I had been led to believe it a city of extreme neatness and scrupulous cleanliness, but it is dirty and filthy notwithstanding there is a clear stream of water running down either side of each principal street, and many other features conducive to a good order of things.
"Sacred" Square and Mormon Square, each consisting of ten acres, occupy the center of the city; the former enclosed by the Tabernacle, the Assembly Hall, and the Temple. The grounds are artistically planned and sweet with flowers and shrubs. Here are the only old door flowers I have seen in town, but birds are very numerous although they consist of but one species, the tame but vicious little English sparrow imported many years ago and which has driven every other bird away.
The tabernacle is a large elliptical building with an oval roof and is capable of seating an audience of a thousand persons, and is a model of convenience, its floor being on a level with the ground, and having large folding doors at short intervals clear around its vast circumference, would permit the egress of a large audience in the fraction of a minute. Its acoustic capabilities are extraordinary; the old Mormon in charge asked me to walk to the further end, and standing there, over two hundred feet away, I could plainly hear him whisper, and the noise of a pin dropped upon the pulpit was plainly audible. Services are held every Sunday afternoon, and here assembles the largest regular congregation in the United States. Just before the close of the services I stole out quietly and found an eminence in a distant corner of the ground, where I could see the vast audience emerge and it was a fair sight to see six thousand people pouring out at half a hundred doors! The large organ was built here entirely and is the largest in America, with one exception; it is thirty by thirty-three feet in size, its front towers being near sixty feet high and containing altogether near three thousand pipes.

Assembly Hall, where the dignitaries of the church hold their councils, is built entirely of cut granite. Though not large, it is a beautiful edifice. The ceiling is divided into sixteen panels, each containing an historical or emblematical picture, the principal ones being over the east and west ends; that in the eastern end contains a large though not very artistic picture of Joseph Smith conversing with an old man of long, gray beard, supposed to be an angel; the inscription, if my memory serves me truly, for we were allowed only a minute in the hall, is, "The Angel Moroni Showing the Prophet Joseph where the plates were hid in the Hill Cumorah." The western panel contains a fresco delineation of the "All Seeing Eye" and the emblematical "Hive of Bees."
But the Temple is the center of attraction for all strangers and tourists. Its interest and grandeur do not consist in its dimensions, but in the beauty and minuteness of its delicate ornamentation, all in enduring granite. Three years are yet required for its completion, although its construction was begun thirty-seven years ago. Boys, who learned the stone artisan's trade on its foundations have merged into manhood and grown grown grey in no other work than fashioning the blocks which slowly but steadily raise the beautiful structure toward the heavens.

No alien hands dare touch its sacred stones, No gentile's foot shall tread its Godly halls.
None but favored Mormons are employed upon the work, and no gentile contributions would be accepted under any circumstances. Five millions of dollars have already been expended in its construction, and many a dollar will yet be required before its completion. While I was standing outside the eastern gate, an old Mormon lady came up and knocked for admission, and when the gate was unlocked I made an effort to follow her, but an arm was quickly thrust forth to bar me and I was curtly informed that I could not enter.
"Mormon Square" is enclosed with a cobble stone and mortar wall about eight feet high and contains the tithing yard and offices pertaining thereto, and the old residence of Brigham Young and his numerous family. What is known as the "Bee Hive" House where Brigham died is now undergoing extensive repairs, but a modest door plate still bears his name. Extending west from this house, which was once quite a fine mansion, is a long row of smaller residences which were occupied, and are some of them still occupied by some of his wives, all being connected by enclosed passages so that the president could at any time visit his extensive family without being exposed to the elements. Just across the street from the Beehive is the Amelia Palace, a grand residence built for his favorite wife. She died about thirteen years ago and lies in a beautiful private cemetery near his residence. The cemetery is enclosed by a beautiful iron fence set on a foundation of granite, and the gates kept locked, but I could not resist an act of vandalism in stepping over the fence and securing a memento, in the form of a few alfalfa blossoms, from his grave, which is entirely without inscription, not even his name is on the large, thick, marble slab which covers the place where he lies, but there are many decayed and withered flowers and wreaths and crosses strewn over it. Whatever Brigham Young may have been to the world, to his own people he was a great and good man and much loved and revered.

There are many Mormon co-operative institutions here. The Z. C. M. I. (Zion's Co-Operative Mercantile Institute) is a large wholesale and retail store which carries millions of dollars worth of stock, and every ward has its church store, and nearly all kinds of manufacturing is carried on. I was shown through the large shoe factory where nearly all of the employees are Mormon girls.
Garfield beach at the southern extremity of the Great Salt Lake is the principal attraction just now, hundreds going every day to bathe. Trains leave the city every hour during the day, the last one returning at 10 o'clock in the evening. Its most unpleasant feature is its distance from town, which is twenty miles, but the fare is only fifty cents for the round trip, and twenty-five cents for use of suit and bathing privileges. The pavilion and open dance hall is built about a hundred yards out into the lake, and all around it and far out into the lake, nearly every hour in the day, scores of men and women and children may be seen enjoying the warm temperature of the water.
It is a singular fact that one does not greatly enjoy his first bath or two. My first experience was to get my eyes and mouth full of the nauseating liquid. I plunged in and struck out for a good swim, but my feet flew out of the water as if they were a cork, which motion had a natural tendency to throw my head downward, but being in shallow water, I managed to regain an upright position and was content to wade around for a while. Upon observation I perceived that nearly all the bathers around me were lying quietly on their backs lazily floating around with their heads slightly raised and feet crossed and sticking up out of the water. After a few attempts I succeeded in mastering the floating act and the next time I took a bath I lit my cigar, took my book and threw myself boldly on my back, and while the band played sweet music, and the waves lifted me gently up and down I smoked and read with as much ease and security, as if I had been in a hammock. The water of the lake contains 22 per cent of saline matter, which makes it so dense that it is simply impossible for the human body to sink in it. Everything is owned and under the immediate supervision of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.
My next letter will be dated from Boston.
T. J. CHESHIRE.
