"Only a Little Chap."
"I know," said the conductor, as he finished counting up and lighted a cigar, "that most people consider us a hard-hearted lot, but we've got to be, or at least must appear to be. A railroad company has little to do with sentiment and a great deal to do with business. I can't afford to let people ride at my expense, so what am I to do?"

No remedy being suggested, he smoked on in silence for two or three minutes, and then continued:
"I didn't use to have so much heart about it, always excusing myself on the plea of duty; but one night about three years ago something happened which has kept my heart pretty soft ever since. It was on the run out of Buffalo, and when I came to take up the fares I came across a woman and a child. She was palefaced and poorly clad, and she had a world of trouble on her face. I saw that in a general way, but it was not my business to pity her. The child with her, a boy of seven or eight, was lying back on the seat, with her old shawl for a pillow. She offered me one full-fare ticket to a point about forty miles below, but I demanded one for the boy.

"Please sir," she said, "we are very poor, and he's only a little chap, and I'm taking him home to die."
"That was no excuse, and I plainly told her that she must pay for him or he'd have to get off. I thought she was trying to beat his way, but in that I was mistaken. It was a dark and rainy night, and she'd never got ready to leave the train at the next station if she'd had money to pay for the boy. I felt a bit ashamed when I saw her making ready and it hurt me to see her leaning over him and both cry together, but one of our men had been discharged only a week before for overhauling a one-legged soldier who only wanted a lift of ten miles."

"And no one offered to pay the boy's fare?"
"For a wonder, no. There was a full crowd in the car, but all seemed to look upon the pair with suspicion. I hated to put them off, and I was hoping the woman would make one more appeal and give me a shawl to back water, when the train ran into — and she made ready to get off. The least I could do was to help her with the boy. I picked him up and started to follow her out, but I had hardly taken notice of his white face and tear-wet cheeks, when he uttered a shriek of fear, straightened out in my arms, and next instant I knew I held a corpse. Yes, sir, the life went out of him with that cry, and the mother turned on me with a look I can never forget, and cried:
"He's dead! He's dead! And you have killed him!"

"I don't like to think of it," whispered the conductor, after a long silence. "I had my month's wages in my pocket and I gave her every dollar of it, and the passengers raised as much more, and when I left her with her dead at the next station I had done everything I possibly could, but that didn't clear me. I had been too harsh and cold. She had told me the truth and I had doubted her. She had asked for mercy and I had ordered her out into the night and the storm with a dying boy in her care. She has never forgiven me, and never will, and try as hard as I may I can never forgive myself."—N. Y. Sun.

Is It a Miracle?
The Ashland Tidings says that about two weeks ago somebody who was in the new Catholic church in Ashland noticed a discoloration on the wall back of the gallery which presents in indistinct outline a resemblance to a female figure of the angel class, with wings and all. Since it was noticed there have been many visitors to the church to inspect it and some people who are most easily impressed by the wonderful and unusual in the world about them are inclined to figure out a miracle of the old-fashioned sort—a tracing of the figure of the Holy Virgin on the walls of the church by spiritual hands. Whether there is supposed to be any special significance attached to the occurrence, whether it is a good omen or an omen of any sort, is not settled upon yet. The figure, however, is not clearly enough defined nor pretty enough as a picture to be very impressive, and most people will take the earthly view of the matter—which is that the apparition is the result of a discoloration of the wall by moisture or some other cause affecting the tints used in the gilding mixture applied sometime ago, and that there is nothing spiritual about it.

Sixteen Thousand Bills.
New York Sun.
The last Saturday of September is the earliest date set for the adjournment of Congress by the most sanguine Representative anxious to get home to his district.

Last week the total number of bills already introduced in the Senate during the present session reach 4,391; and the total introduced in the House reached 12,930. Altogether, 16,421 new laws have been proposed by the Senators and Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress since the National Legislature met in last December.
At this rate it will not be long before Mr. Tilden's surprising prophecy made in 1875, that 20,000 bills would be introduced, will be literally fulfilled. 16,400 bills! That is 73 a day since Congress met; a dozen laws proposed during every hour that this Congress has been in session.
Mr. Tilden was right. Nobody can know what is in them.

A Scholarly Notice.
The following is said to be a literal copy of the rules posted on a school house up in the Big Bend country: "Each pupil is required to make a bow on entering the School of morning, also on leaving of the School Room of evening. There shall be no profane language used in School nor on the play ground, nor there shall be no pin-sticking, pinching, scolding, nor no teeggin, nor no uneasy Whisperin in school. No pupil shall leave the School house without permission of the Teacher. No uneasy movern from seat to seat. No flitin on the road from nor to School nor no Nick-namin. Every pupil over eight years old shall be subje to these rules, and the teacher is to make allowence for all pupils under eight and enforce the rules accorder. If any scholar breaks these rules the shall be punished by switechin."

A Valuable Bovine.
The Astoria Pioneer says that B. F. Hall, residing up the river in the vicinity of Hall's ferry, has a half roan Durham cow which brought him four calves inside of eleven months, all alive and doing well, and on good grass the past season gave about five gallons of rich milk each day. The first two calves came in April, 1889, and the next two last March, the former both being males and the latter a male and female. A man with a few cows like that could soon stock the ranges of Eastern Oregon.

With all its faults, the present congress, even in the hurry of the closing days of the session, is not forgetful of the dead. A resolution has been passed to print 10,000 copies of the eulogies delivered in congress upon the late Representative Wilbur, of New York, of which fifty copies shall be bound in full morocco for use of the family of deceased, all at a cost of $4,500. Twenty-five thousand of the eulogies on Samuel Randall will cost $10,375, which was more money than Randall was able to leave his family after a lifetime of public service. The same amount was expended, sacred to the memory of Senator Beck, and the entire list of the dead, of this session of congress, will cost $25,000. What a wasteful waste of money this is and the shame of it is that the handsomely printed books are mainly used as campaign documents.—Sunday Welcome.

The discussion of the water works question in the Dalles must be getting rather warm judging from the following editorial remarks in the Times-Mountaineer of the 20 inst: "We have heard that some of the offshoots of this city—the foetid emanations of public sewers—have talked of a necktie party regarding the editor of the Times-Mountaineer. To them we will calmly say that this paper, on the water question, is anchored to its principles, and they will meet a hearty welcome when they attempt any intimidation. We are naturally constructed to oppose such elements, and will give them a cordial reception when they attempt to inaugurate a policy of violence."

The Mississippi Constitutional Convention has adopted the educational test as a qualification for voting. It applies to whites and blacks impartially and is not to take effect until 1896—giving ample time for illiterates to learn to read.

The total receipts of the state fair at Salem amounted to $19,906.85, which is a considerable increase over the receipts of previous years. This is a good showing and evinces the fact that people generally take an interest in fairs.

Give Them a Chance!
That is to say, your lungs! Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them. When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Rosch's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.
