Shall farmers continue to produce fruits for home use in face of the fact that insect foes are apparently on the increase, making fruit-growing very un-certain? It is seldom we meet with a farmer who is not discouraged in this line, writes John L. Shawyer in Farm who operate in the large flats of the wealthy.

Too frequently, however, where this is the case, the wheat and corn are marketed and the money used for other purposes. It is certainly cheaper to produce one's own supply of fruit than to purchase it on the market, even though one must contend with insects and diseases. One is then assured of a supply if the season is favorable, and can enjoy the fruit in its treshest and most delightful condition.

Buckwheat and rye for fall and winter pasture, turnips, rutabagas and winter radishes can be sown in many cases after the wheat and oats are harvested and yet give a good yield. A good way to put in rye, writes N. J. S. in the Prairie Farmer, is to sow the seed broadcast among the corn just before the last enltivation. In a majority of casesunless the corn is foul with weed seeds -this is all that will be necessary. the time the corn is harvested and hauled off the rye will have made such a growth as to afford a considerable amount of feed in the fall and early winter.

Buckwheat is a good crop to grow for green manuring. Its quick growth, in addition to the effect produced upon the soil, places it next to clover to plow under as a green fertilizer. Wheat or oat stubble can be broken up and the seed sown broadcast and harrowed in and a sufficient growth will be secured before frost to turn under a good layer as a fertilizer. Gray Beards and Business.

I heard a story the other day which was told to illustrate the different way in which young men are regarded in Boston and New York in reference to their capacity for business. A middle aged man who left this city for the larger one to go into business surprised his friends here on his return on a visit by appearing without the full beard which he wore on his departure. With his jaunty mustache, which was the only relic of his hirsute appendages, he looked quite youthful, and was hardly recognizable by his acquaintances. On asking the reason for the change he said, "A man must look young in New York to get business; my full beard streaked with gray was an obstacle to my success there, though it was a help to me in Boston."

I suppose there is enough basis in this experience of the transplanted Bostonian to serve as a text for a discourse on the slow going business methods of this city as compared with New York, but there is something to be said on the other side of the question. The rush and the whirl of American life are moderated by a system of conducting business which leaves time for interest in something besides money making, and it is pleasant to have the gray beard recognized as a sign of maturity of experience and judgment .-

"Blind Hal," the Sparrows' Friend. "Blind Hal," the sparrows' friend, is one of the most interesting inmates in the quarter for blind men at Blockley lived for some years an honored gust almshouse. He has been a resident of -bectator, the ward many years, and has made it his practice to feed the little birds in one corner of the yard three times a day, rain or shine. The birds have got to know him, and just before feeding out that he has no place he can all time will congregate in numbers outside on a tree close by the door through which he comes. They have learned his correspondence. Something about it to know him, and on his appearance there is that smacks of snobbishnes. hail him with a storm of their chatter and song. They fly to meet him, and will light upon his shoulders and head. He carries a stick, yet the little feathered friends never fear him, and keep close to their friend, "Blind Hal." When he is ill the birds seem to know it, and keep up such a noise that they have to be frightened away by some of the officials. "Blind Hal" is never so

A lady of this sort lives in one of the cities of Maine. She is quite wealthy, moves in "good society," and has a great "flow" of language, a good deal of which is, however, interspersed with words and expressions that are a trifle incoherent, to say the least. An acquaintance was one day talking with her and wickedly complimented her upon her unusual and surprising command of language, and upon the fact that she seemed never at a loss for Extraordinary Growth.

The following extraordinary instance eies has been noted in France by a member of the French Academy of Sciences and reported by him in the 7 years of age when I first saw him; but his tender years notwithstanding. he measured 4 feet, 8 inches and 4 lines high. His people had observed his marvelous growth when he was only 2 years of age. At 4 he was able to lift and carry a bushel of wheat and to throw the bundles of hay (68 pounds) to the four horses each night; and at 6 he left—are in my opinion fairy tales.—Detect bodily strength, his understanding was no greater than is usual with children Bellini's piano, on which he composed of his age; playthings were also his fa-

Geese in a Fog. The oddest story of geese in the for comes from Norfolk, and was told to Mr. Stevenson, the author of "The Birls of Norfolk," by the Rev. H. T. Frere, A large flock of geese were attracted to its town of Diss on a foggy night by the lights, and from the sound of their volca seemed to fly scarcely higher than the tops of the houses. They came about 7 p. m., and, as it was Sunday evening, they appeared a be especially attracted by the lights is

Many of those gorgeous lamp shades

that bewilder the eye from half a down show windows on Fifth avenue are main at home by women who have seen the proverbial "better days." The work requires nicety of taste and skill in needle work. Designs and materials are furnished sometimes by the shopkeeper, sometimes by the women that do the work. The largest shades are made our parasol frames. The materials entering into the work are silk, satin, lace and artificial flowers. Prices of the more elaborate shades vary from $16 to $50, so that the cost of a handsome lamp fully equipped may run up to $500. In some cases milliners also make lamp shades, and the fact that they are able to utilize remnants of silks and of other materials gives them a peculiar advantage in this business.-New York
