Guessing at the Weather.

The United States department of agriculture's weathers bulletin, says, xt to December, January is the wettest month in the year on the Pacific slope, and the general rule covering the December distribution of precipitation is followed very closely by the January falls, except that on the middle Call fornia coast the rains become slightly heavier in localities. The heaviest pre cipitations occurs in a belt some twent twenty-five miles wide along the Washington coast and in Oregon, north and south of Coos county, ex-tending southward into California over the upper Censt range. The chart of the January rains on the Pacific slope shows a general average of six Inches of precipitation north of the thirty-first parallel in California, excepting only from two to four inches in extreme Northeast California and a like amount in the Sacramento valley. Between the thirty-sixth and thirty-eighth par allel from one to four inches usually portions and south of the thirty-sixth parallel along the coast from two to our inches, decreasing to but a few tenths of an inch in the eastern half2of this section.

Whenever the cars are to make a trip the proprietor advertises the fact several days ahead in the newspapers, probably so nobody will get left when the bell rings. He is a Texas man and his imported mule isn't acclimated yet, so that his sickness during the rainy season causes business in that line to be at a standstill most of the time. Then the proprietor is also of a thrifty turn and takes outside contracts of excavating sewers and the like which also compels him to stop the cars while his mule assists him in carrying out his contracts as he did in Rose while on the sewerage work last fall.
