Miss Baldie, with the assistance of a man, who ran up to see what was the matter, assisted Smith to Moody's drug store, where a hack was ordered, and he was sent to the Good Samaritan Hospital where, at last reports, he was resting easy, but it was thought advisable to take a death statement, and the same will be taken this afternoon, Baldie has been arrested.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

A Sensational Report of How the Prisoners Escaped.

The Roseburg Plaindealer says: The two prisoners from Lane county, who have been confined in the Douglas county jail for the past month or six weeks, escaped Saturday night. There is a difference of opinion as to how their release was accomplished, but it was undoubtedly owing to negligence that their escape was made possible, even with the aid of outside help, as is claimed by some persons to have been the case. The desperate character of the men was well-known to Sheriff Miller, and he therefore watched them very carefully. Some time since his vigilance was rewarded by the discovery that they were up to some trick, and when he went to lock them up one evening he found that one of his prisoners was represented by a dummy in bed, while the prisoner himself was on top of the steel cells. Sunday morning another dummy was found in one of the beds, but there was no prisoner on top of the cells or anywhere else about the jail. Deputy Sheriff Dillard locked the pris-

Deputy Sheriif Dillard locked the pris-oners up Saturday night, and at the time they requested him to bring them a good breakfast early Sunday morn-ing. He thought it a rather queer re-mark for them to make, but thought everything was all secure, and so did not visit the jail again that night. On visiting the jail in the morning the old sheet iron door was found, beat, back sheet iron door was found bent back, as has been the case on several previous occasions, the door to the cage open and the prisoners gone. For several months the combination lock on the cage has been broken, and consequently was not in use. The door to the cage is locked by two Yale locks, one of which is in a steel chest, which one of which is in a steel chest, which is locked with a key lock and the combination. The key lock was easily picked, and then it was the work of but a few minutes to saw the Yale locks off, and the men were at liberty. The tools used were an ordinary three-tined fork, with two of the tines broken off, and a case knife, which had been hacked to answer for a saw. How easy it was to pick the key lock on the steel chest was shown by Conductor Bartlett, who with the aid of the fork opened the lock in less than a minute. Had the combination been on it would have been an impossibility for a person to get out of the cage, and on it would have been an impossibility for a person to get out of the cage, and had the old Iron door been properly made or braced it would be impossible to get out of the jail without making more or less noise. All the work that was done to effect the release of the men was practically noiseless, and Jas. A. Sterling, who was sleeping in one of the rooms over the jail, heard no noise whatever.
