AN ENCAMPMENT SITE.

Brigadier-General Compton and staff, Oregon National Guard, passed through Portland from Salem, Thursday, where they have been holding the monthly meeting of the state military board.

National Guardsmen Will Go Into Camp Next Year.

A. D. Hyland interviewed. In an interview with a Portland Telegram reporter the other day, Mr. Hyland very correctly states the harvest situation of this year as follows:

Mr. A. D. Hyland, of Lowell, Lane county, is in Portland. He has a ranch of over 7000 acres in Lane county and has 1000 head of cattle.

The wheat crop in Lane county was full this year, but is of an excellent quality, and is bringing a high price.

Hope and wheat are the two crops that will be the greatest of the year, and of course, cost much less to pick and market the smaller crop.

The fruit crop is very poor this year, which I attribute principally to the fact that so many Eastern trees have been put out in this country, which do not do so well as native trees here.
