I saw a something in the street As I chanced to pass, At first I thought it was a man, But ah! It was an ass.

The hat, the collar, and the fie, The clothes in full array, But oh! those cars stuck up so high But oh! those cars stuck up a They gave him dead away.

He brayed so loud and looked so tired,

The pecple soon caught on, And built a graveled street For him to walk upon.

Sung Himself.

Sung Himself. A good story has been allowed to lie around for a month without giving it to the public, and the Pendleton Tri-bune considers it to good to keep. It appears that a citizen of Pendleton had loaned his father $100, taking a note for the amount. The father resided in New York state. The aforesaid citizen sent the note back East to attorneys, instructing them to sue his father and remit. In the meantime, the old gen-tieman died, leaving all his property to the citizen. The attorneys said nothing, entered suit against the estate, ran up the charges and took the costs out of the residue of the estate. This amounted to the citizen sainst himself on a note due himself, instruc-ing the attorneys to enter suit against himself for the debt and costs against himself and paying to himself the whole amount. If any one can beat this record of brilliant financial engi-neering, let him speak or forever after hold his peace.
