Through Oregon.

The June number of Outing gives an interesting account of Lenz's blevelet trip through Oregon on his way arou the world. We clip a few paragraphs of local interest: At Salem the whoelmen of Portland returned and once again I was left to wheel alone. I continued up the valley, passing the Ore-gou state reform school perched high on a hill, to Turner, Marion and Jefferson-all small towns. The roads were still level and fine, and I reached Albany, 61 miles from Aurora, early in the evening. All along the road were large fields, the grain of which was hemia wagon road and the court being already cut, and probably on the placid fully advised in the matter. It is hereby ordered that the following rates atic scaports. Here and there were of toll be and are hereby established short stretches of forests, with small brooks, affording nice, shady and cool rides. Every once in a while Mount Hood, 60 or 80 miles off, peeped its conical, snow-covered peak over the Cascades from the east, until near Albany, when it vanished entirely. The rug-ged coast range on the right divided the Willamette valley from the Pacific ocean. All in all the valley had the appearance of the famous Shenandoah in Virginia, visited during my previous rambles awheel. The valley south of Albany expands to a breadth of 40 of 50 miles. The roads were level, and good riding through the small pretty villages of Tangent, Shedd, Hal-sey to Harrisburg. Here I met two wheelmen, crossed the Willamette river, on a ferry, and continued, via Junc-tion City and Irving to Eugene. Here ends the Willamette valley, 140 miles long, the paradise of the industrious

The Celebration.

Daily Guard, June 7. The celebration committee waited on he greater number of our business men yesterday afternoon to gain their sentiments regarding the celebration for this year. The project met with almost unanimous approval and each declared himself willing to help with a reasonable subscription. If this is done there is no doubt that the committee will be able to prepare a pro gramme both interesting and enjoyable. The committee will begin solicit ing subscription to the fund necessary tomorrow morning, and if the amount is promptly subscribed the preparations of the committee will immediately commence. The committee is composed of burst ness men who are giving their time t a public service, and they should not be put off or delayed, as it is alread late and the preparatory work must be expedited. Tell them tomorrow, no next week, what you will subscribe for if a sufficient amount cannot be raised it is better to know it in the beginning. Daily Guard, June 6.
