

THE SAN FRANCISCO BOARD OF HEALTH.

We, the members of the Board of Health of the City and County of San Francisco,

Cordially approve and recommend the Royal Baking Powder. It is absolutely pure and healthful, composed of the best ingredients, of the highest strength and character.

In our judgment it is impossible to make a purer or stronger Baking Powder than the Royal.

THE OLD DRESS.

Mrs. Langdon had sent out cards of invitation to her "dear 500" friends for a grand ball at her elegant residence on Fifth avenue in honor of the entrance of her twin daughters into society.

They had just been graduated at some fashionable "finishing off" establishment, and their debut was intended to be a very magnificent affair.

Mrs. Gregory, husband and daughters were on the invited list. As the former and two latter sat in their parlor looking at the elegant cards, with the interesting subject under deep discussion, they were broken in upon by the entrance of Mr. Gregory, who looked harassed and weary.

"Papa!" cried Lena, the elder daughter, "see our invitations to Mrs. Langdon's great ball, 'showing him the cards she held in her hand. 'And there is the loveliest silk at Stewart's that I want to wear. Can I go and order it tomorrow?'" she pleaded, laying her white hand, flashing with jewels, on his arm, and looking up into his face.

"Haven't you any dresses to wear?" he asked somewhat moodily.

"A plenty of old ones, which have already been worn and will not answer for this particular event," she returned.

"How much will it cost?" Mr. Gregory asked.

"Oh, perhaps a hundred and fifty," said Lena calmly, with as little idea of the value of money as an unfledged bird.

Her father groaned and said something about "foolish extravagance," then drawing out his pocketbook slowly counted out the required sum and laid it on the table.

"How much do you want, Bertha," he asked, turning toward her.

"I don't think I want any, papa. I have a pretty dress, which will answer very nicely," she replied.

"You're a sensible girl, and the man that gets you for a wife will have some one to help him keep his head above water," said Mr. Gregory, as he left the room.

"What is the trouble with papa? What does make him talk so dolefully when he is asked for a little money?" said Lena.

"Any one would think he was a poor man."

"It is one of his money nervous spells, he is always so afraid his business affairs won't come out just so straight; then it is economy and retrenchment, or everything will drift to bankruptcy. That is the way business men always talk till it has become quite an old story with me," said Mrs. Gregory, drawing a breath of relief.

"I don't think papa is trying to frighten us at all," said Bertha. "I think his business does really perplex him. I've noticed for a week that he looked pale and careworn and he said but little."

"Was that the reason you didn't want a new ball dress?" asked Lena.

"Yes, I'd rather wear an old one than place papa to the expense of a new one so, while money is so hard to raise," replied Bertha.

"Really, Miss Bertha, you are becoming quite learned in financial affairs. I should think papa would give you the position of private counselor in his counting room. With your wise brain to aid him, he might sail through seas of trouble, dry shod," said Lena with sarcasm.

"Pray inform us how you came to know so much about monetary affairs, my daughter," said Mrs. Gregory.

"I heard papa and Mr. Ainsley talking about business when he was here the other evening, and he said it was almost an impossibility to get any money at all now," said Bertha.

"Well, you are a little goose; if you will go to the grandest ball of the season in an old mackerel ball dress, and be ridiculed by all the elite, you can do so. A few hundred dollars can't make much difference anyway. And when you see the victory which may, perhaps, be won over a certain attractive gentleman of our mutual acquaintance by your elder sister's more stylish toilet, you will regret your decision in favor of Mme. Noab's antediluvian costume," said Lena sneeringly.

"I'm perfectly indifferent to the praise or contempt of the fashionable world, for there is neither heart nor sincerity in it. And concerning the gentleman of whom you so strangely hint, if his heart is only susceptible to the influence of costly apparel, he can pay court to it as long as he wishes without once exciting my jealousy, as I want no dry goods worshiper for my future life's lord. So, ma chere sister, you have the field open and clear to yourself."

"March on, march on, ye brave, to victory or death!" sang Bertha, jubilantly, waving her handkerchief at Lena, who was picking up her money from the table where her father had laid it and humming a gay opera air.

"Bertha, what dress have you to wear? You haven't any that you're not already worn two or three times at least, and I desire my daughters to make as elegant an appearance to any of their friends on this occasion," said Mrs. Gregory.

As Mrs. Gregory was a particular friend of Mrs. Langdon, she felt in duty bound to honor, as much as possible, the advent of her daughters to the fashionable world; and the attire of her own daughters on this occasion was an important consideration.

"I'm going to have Mme. Leicester make over my blue gros grain silk, and you know she is a noted genius for re-weaving worn ball dresses; but if, after it is done, it looks antediluvian and smells musty, I'll do penance by staying at home," said Bertha.

Lena purchased the new dress and had it made up without regard to expense.

Bertha's dress came from the mantua-maker's hands as beautiful as it could be, and none would ever have suspected it had already been three worn unless she had been seen with it. It harmonized admirably with her hair, blond complexion, forming a vivid contrast to Lena's more brilliant style of personal attractiveness and bright, orange colored robe.

The day previous to the ball Clara Ainsley called, a sister of Hugh Ainsley, who was the first, central star around which the feminine luminaries had ambitiously beamed for the last two seasons, each fondly hoping to be the finally favored one.

But to the secret chagrin of each, he still maintained the same quiet courteous manners toward them all. He seemed quite as indifferent to their heart affairs as he would have been to the pyramids of Egypt. This was the generous Lena was bending all her energies to insure and bring to her feet before the present season closed.

Clara was an intimate friend of both the girls, and was invited up stairs to see the dresses, which had just been sent home. Their beauty she warmly expatiated on, but Lena would not allow her to leave until she had told her of Bertha's wonderful fit of economy, and laughingly said she should certainly take her own opera glasses with her to the ball, that she might descry some interesting, poor young gentleman, with whom she knew her sister must have a secret understanding, and for whose benefit she was carrying out this whim of prudence.

The combined entreaties of all the trio could not induce Mr. Gregory to accompany them to Mrs. Langdon's. He pleaded a headache and fatigue. This was a cover to the real reason. His business affairs were daily becoming more entangled by means of several heavy failures of parties owing him to a great extent, and all he could see before him was ruin and disgrace; but he would keep his forebodings to himself until after the fete was over, when, if he found no means of extricating himself, he would make a clean breast of the whole thing to them.

Hugh Ainsley was quite attentive to Mrs. Lena that night, who looked very queer in the gay throng, and his attentions were received with deep satisfaction to herself. Nor was the less interested Bertha, who had laid no siege to him, overlooked.

He inquired at once whether her father was, as he had not seen him there. To her reply that he had resisted all entreaty to come, from great fatigue, he uttered a prolonged "Ah!" and fell into a reverie.

Hugh was thinking of the vague report he had heard in Wall street that morning, that the commercial house of Gregory & Co. was fast tottering toward bankruptcy.

The next morning at an early hour Hugh called on Mr. Gregory's counting house and offered him loans to any amount to help him through the financial crisis that was upon him.

Mr. Gregory had done the same deed years before for Hugh's father, and he (Hugh) kindly pressed the favor back upon him, which was accepted with tears of gratitude in the eye of the panic-stricken merchant.

As Clara and Hugh sat at dinner the next day after the ball discussing the costumes brought out there, she related what Lena had told her of Bertha's streak of economy.

"Is that so, Clara?" he asked. "Was she as self-sacrificing as that? But she looked as sweet as a rose bud in her dress, if it had been worn three times."

Then he told her in confidence of the state of Mr. Gregory's affairs, and the reason which had probably deterred Bertha from outfit for a new dress.

"She is a noble girl, Clara, and I'm afraid we couldn't number many like her among that gay assembly at Mrs. Langdon's. Surely 'all is not gold that glitters.'"

A week after this the footman at the Gregorys brought up a card to the parlor for "Miss Bertha, and the gentleman is waiting below in the drawing room."

Bertha glanced at the card and saw "Hugh Ainsley" inscribed thereon.

"Did you say this was for me, John?" she asked, thinking it might have been intended for Lena.

"Yes, ma'am. He said 'Miss Bertha,' replied the servant.

Lena posted at this. She had thought he had made a mistake, and an angry frown clouded her face as Bertha descended to the drawing room.

"Was it me you wished to see, Mr. Ainsley?" she asked after saluting him.

"It was you yourself. Why? permit me to inquire?"

"I thought it might be one of John's blunders, and that sister Lena was the one desired," said Bertha.

"No, Miss Bertha; it is you with whom I have special business," he said, at the same time watching the sudden enlargement of her blue eyes when he said business.

"For several years, Miss Bertha, I've been searching in the circle of my acquaintance for a noble, untroubled woman to ask to become my wife. I have just been fortunate enough to find her, and have now come to ask her if she will bear my name and share with me my earthly lot. Bertha, you are the chosen one, and my heart's best and purest affection I lay at your feet. Will you answer me 'Yes?'"

"Give me time to think, please; it is so sudden," she stammered, covering her face with her hands to conceal her blushes.

"You shall have three whole months to consider the subject; then I shall demand an unconditional answer," said Hugh, drawing the hands from her face and pressing them to his lips.

"In three months Bertha decided to say 'Yes,' and their engagement was announced to the gay world.

Another three months and the gay world was invited to their public wedding church. After much coaxing Lena was prevailed upon to be Bertha's bridesmaid, but it was a bitter disappointment to stand in that place, instead of next to the groom.

In after years she learned that Bertha's "old ball dress" had turned the scale in favor of her and won Hugh Ainsley. He reasoned that the daughter who would sacrifice her own desires for the sake of lessening the burden weighing upon the shoulders of her father could not fail to make a true wife.—Buffalo News.

A Daring Gunner.

My battery participated in the battle of Pes Ridge on March 6, 7 and 8, 1862. Thomas Davis, a private, acting as No. 4 at one of the guns, leaped upon his gun, and stretching himself out at full length amid a perfect storm of shell and shrapnel and musket balls shouted to the enemy, who were in line of battle a short distance away, "Send one of your men over, and I will fight him single handed, and settle this picnic." He remained there shouting till the battery was ordered to fall back for ammunition. Davis never received a scratch.—L. J. White in New York Press.

Disabled with a Cargo of Brandy.

In 1880 the bark Rosina, with a cargo of fine French brandy from Charente, France, for this port, ran ashore in a gale off the southern coast of Long Island. The crew threw overboard a portion of her cargo in an attempt to lighten the ship, but she was finally hauled off by a wrecking company, which received $50,000 salvage. For two or three years afterwards all the taverns along the southern coast of Long Island sold fine French brandy at ten cents per glass.—New York Evening Sun.

Why a Man Joins a Club.

Within a few years the craze for clubs has extended to all classes of society and men, sexes until almost every man and boy in the community is a member of some club, and many ladies have their clubs at which to meet their friends and talk over the fashions or more serious matters. When the craze took the people they seemed to think it was something in the way of enjoyment which they had overlooked, while business men found in it a new and quick way of communication with customers, and a continuation of business through the evening, as well as during the hours of daylight. The club served also to the men of business as a means of acquaintance with men whom they might not otherwise meet without considerable difficulty, and who might, by rubbing against each other, serve each other's purposes or profit.

It is a striking fact that in many cases the names of our most remarkable clubs are misnomers, misleading to the uninitiated, and the real objects of the gathering a mystery to the members. A man joins a club for reasons of his own, which are enjoyment, seclusion from the outer world, independence, conviviality and select acquaintance. He wants a place at which he may meet a friend—he wants the tone of the club and the privilege of rubbing against whom he regards as his superiors in many things, particularly business and wealth—and he doesn't care about the objects of the organization if there be any other than what he is there for.—New York Times.

Statistics of Church Livings.

There are at present 1,074 Church of England livings with an annual income of less than £100; 1,817 of a value from £100 to £150 a year; 2,274 between £150 and £200 a year; 4,355 between £200 and £300 a year; and 4,102 over £300 a year.—London Tit-Bits.

HEALTH IN OLD AGE.

Edward Collinson, Queens, N. Y., says: "I commenced using BARKBERRY'S PILLS over fifty-five years ago. I first bought them in London, and have continued using them since I came to this country in 1836. I am now over seventy-five years old, hale and hearty, and attribute my wonderful health to the persistent use of BARKBERRY'S PILLS. Accidentally I have a cold or severe attack of rheumatism, indigestion or biliousness, but four or five doses of BARKBERRY'S PILLS always cure me. When ever my children have been sick with scarlet fever, measles, cold stomach, disordered digestion or colic, a few doses of BARKBERRY'S PILLS restored their health at once."

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a running ear or it is imperfectly sealed, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Write for our circular, which is mailed on request, and which is nothing but an infallible cure of the mucous surface. Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circular, free.

40 YEARS OF PAIN CURED. THE CASE OF N. ALBANY ST., ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 19, 1881.

For several years I have been a victim of rheumatism. I was persuaded to try St. Jacobs Oil. I have used two bottles, and a man more free from rheumatism never walked our streets. My limbs that were once stiff and lame are now as light and limber as in my youth.

How many remedies there are which merely relieve without curing disease. The contrast with Punder's is plain. The latter, by its action, not only cures, but it also restores the system to its normal condition. It is a powerful purifier of the blood, and its action is permanent. To Prevent Illness

There is Nothing Equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"In my opinion, one of the greatest mistakes people make is to lock the door, after the horse is stolen, or in other words, to wait until they are sick in bed before they do anything for the poor body. No matter my wife nor myself were real sick. I attended to my business, and my wife to her household duties daily. But we had dull, heavy headaches, and all the over exertion would tire us greatly, and my appetite was very poor. So I bought three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took one, and my wife nearly all of the other two, and the result was perfectly satisfactory.
