Arrested.

The Corvaliis Times, of June 13th, says:
On Monday, a man by the name of Martin, came to Corvallis, from Lane county, bringing with him several head of horses to sell. While on his way a stray animal followed his band, which caused him considerable trouble and which he could not get rid of. Arriving here, Martin took his horses a little ways out in the country, and pastured them, leaving the stray out in the road; and sent word back over the route he came about the horse.

An Age of Lians.—Not only has The Dailes been afflicted with very high water, but it has also been afflicted with liars, whom the Chronicle stirs up like this: Ananias and Sapphira, sacred history tells us, were destroyed because their stock of truth had uiter-because their stock of truth h because their stock of truth had utterly given out. It is unfertunate that their demise did not occur before their progeny became so numerous. Their descendants have grown and multiplied like a hog weed in a garden. The other day one Rosenblatt told the Oregonian the Umatilla house had just floated by Vancouver, and that the whole town had turned out to see it go by. The Umatilla house is 32 feet high and is in the water to the depth of 7 whole town had turned out to see it go by. The Umatilia house is 52 feet high and is in the water to the depth of 7, feet. If Rosenblatt, or any other of the great army of flood liars, can manage to float such a building in that depth of water, they can get a permanent job in the navy department. The other single handed liar who saw the opera house go out before he left and the Umatilia house all affoat, can no longer be classed as an amateur.
