SMILES A GOOD TONIC .- It is high time to shed a few smiles now and then when the prospect of business is then when the prospect of business is under discussion. There are a great many persons, and not a few merchants among them, who have gotten so used to pulling their faces into the semblance of a graveyard, that a customer who doesn't like to feel as though he were constantly in the presence of a walking misfortune, begins to year off and seek out the man who to veer off and seek out the man who has discovered that things are coming our way again. A busy, cheerful air is one of the best business tonics that can be administered in a time like this. The man who cannot read in the experiones of the past years leasons that will be turned to his profit in the fu-ture conduct of his business, has, in-deed, many reasons to look glum, but such are in the great minority, and for him who has weathered the gale there is smoother sailing ahead, and an epportunity offered for applying those
